Novelty in the “Ayurvedic Medicines”

Agnidipaka or the panacea for General complaints,—Removes Indigestion, excites good appetite and improves general health. Per phial Re. 1-0-0.

Amitabali churna or the Baby’s Friend,—cures Infantile Diarrhoea, Fever. Per phial Re. 1-0-0.

Amitabali kasaya or the Blood purifier,—Removes all impurities from the blood, cures Syphilis, Scorfula, Rheumatism, skin-diseases, &c. and improves health. Price per bottle Re. 1-8-0.

Asoka Gritna or The specific for female complaints. Rs. 2-0-0.

Ashokarista cures Dismenorrhea, Amenorrhea, &c., removes sterility. Re. 1-8-0.

Ashwagandharista or The Tonic Balm of Ashwagandha,—cures Nervous and general Debility, removes the poverty of blood, infuses health and cheerfulness. Re. 1-6-0.

Dantadhatva Churna or The celebrated Tooth powder—Allays toothache, cures gums. Per tin Re. 0-8-0.

Kutajarista specific for Dysentery, cures Dysentery, arrests Fever and Anasarca. Rs. 3-0-0.

All sorts of Ayurvedic Medicines, 3 lbs. gratis, &c., can be had at moderate prices. Catalogues will be sent free.

All orders, Money Orders, &c., should be addressed to

T. S. SUBRAMANIA & CO.,
Palghat.

Agents for Ayurvedic Medicines.
Prepared by,
CAVIRAJ NAGENDRA NATH SEN GUPTA,
AYURVEDIC PHYSICIAN.
Government Medical Diploma-Hold.
Member of the Paris Chemical Society, &c.,
Calcutta.

Worth Buying! Worth Reading!! Worth Presenting !!!

“SELF-HELP”

With Illustrations of Conduct and Perseverance

By Dr. S. SMILES,

Author of “Lives of the Engineers.”

Price Rs. 2-10-0. Postage Free.

Educational Review.—“There is no need, we hope, to introduce Dr. Smiles famous Work to Indian Readers. In England for the last thirty years the book has circulated among all classes. That it has, however, a cosmopolitan value is proved by the fact that it is to be found reprinted in various tongues in America and has been translated in German, French, Danish, and Dutch. The reason for this is probably to be found in the variety of anecdotes illustrations of life and character it contains.” Human nature is much the same all over the world, and all but the most degraded must take an interest in the story of how others have struggled and achieved success. It would be difficult to over-estimate the influence which this single volume has exerted over the lives of thousands. We think it was the late Sir Stafford Northcote who remarked that he had read this book while he was still a young man and he was certain that the course of his life would have been considerably modified by its perusal. For our part we know of no more inspiring book on the subject of Self-Help. It is a book which we would like to see widely read in a country where the principle of Self-Help is not applied as much as it might be.”—Sold by

M. N. S. T. S. SUBRAMANIA & Co.,
Booksellers &c., Palghat,
Madras Presidency.

Are you Increasing your Library?
Are you Opening a New Library?

T. S. SUBRAMANIA & CO.

who have a large stock of Books on Hindu Religion, &c., &c.

The following books are highly recommended to beginners in Vedanta Philosophy as they are very popularly written to help and prepare them for higher study.

Raja Yoga Philosophy. Lectures delivered in New York, Winter of 1885-86, by the Swami Vivekananda on Raja Yoga or conquering the internal Nature, also Patanjali’s Yoga Aphorisms, with commentaries. Crown 8 vo. (third edition) Rs. 2-10-0.

Hindu System of Moral Science or a few words on Sutras, Jijnā, and Tusita Guna by Bula Kishori Lal Sarkar, M.A., M.L., Cloth Rs. 1-4-0.

Karma Yoga. Eight Lectures by Swami Vivekananda. Paper Rs. 1-0-0.

Bhakti Yoga. By Swami Vivekananda. Paper Rs. 1-0-0.

The Atman, by Swami Vivekananda, giving a brief but lucid account of the fundamental teachings of the three Schools of Indian Philosophy (Advaita, Visishtadvaita, and Dvaita). An essential work. Rs. 1-0-0.

Narada-Sutras, an Enquiring into the Love (Bhakti Jignasa) Translated from the Sanskrit with an Independent commentary. Cloth Rs. 2-8-0.

Agastya Sutras, an introduction by Pandit R. Ananthakrishna Sastri. (This is a rare manuscript) As. 6.

Gandhipada’s Devi Sutras, Translated into English with an Introduction, by Pandit R. Ananthakrishna Sastri (a rare manuscript). As. 6.

The Vedanta Philosophy, by Prof. Max Muller (Three Lectures on Vedanta Philosophy). Rs. 3-12-0.

Discourses on the Bhagavad Gita, a treatise intended to help the study of the Philosophy of Bhagavad Gita, As. 12.

The Yoga-Sutra of Patanjali (Translation, with Introduction, Appendix and Notes) based upon several authentic commentaries. Rs. 1-6-0.

A Compendium of Raj Yoga Philosophy comprising the principal treatises of Shrimat Shankaracharya and other renowned authors. Rs. 1-8-0.

Principal Twelve Select Upanishads, with Notes from the Skand of Shrimat Shankaracharya and Anandagiri, being a reprint of the translation published by the Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal. Rs. 4-0-0.

The Vedic Philosophy, or an exposition of the Sacred and Mysterious Monosyllable अ (Aum), by Har Narayana, Extra Assistant Commissioner, Punjab. Price Rs. 1-4-0 from bonâ fide Students.

The Bhagavad Gita, by Mrs. Annie Besant. Paper As. 8.

1001 Gems of Hindu Religious Thoughts, As. 4. Names are registered.

Swami Vivekananda Series.

We keep a large stock of Swami Vivekananda Series published by S. C. Mitra, Calcutta.

Six Madras Lectures, Full Text. As. 8.

From Colombo to Almora, The Swami Vivekananda’s Tour comprising Seventeen Lectures. Price Rs. 1-4-0.

Swami’s Visit to Ceylon. As. 5.

Commission Sales.

(1) Best attention will be given to extend the circulation of any new and recently published works entrusted, for sale on commission.

(2) Terms on Application, sample copy if forwarded, will be accepted with thanks.

Printing and Publishing of works undertaken for authors. All orders should particularly specify by what conveyance, i.e., by post, by rail, the books are to be sent.

Apply sharp to

M. N. S. T. S. SUBRAMANIA & Co.,
Publishers and Booksellers, Palghat, Madras Presidency.

Please mention this paper.

PLEASE READ THIS!!!

AN IDEAL OF TRUTHFULNESS

OR

THE STORY OF HARISCHANDRA

IN ENGLISH.

(A true pathetic story, every one should read this book.)

Apply now to—

MESSRS. T. S. SUBRAMANIA & Co.,

Publishers,

PALGHAT, MADRAS PRESIDENCY.

A Rare Opportunity!!

Don't Miss This!!

A Sanskrit English Dictionary, being a practical hand-book with Transliteration, Accentuation and Etymology! Analysis throughout—by A. A. Macdonell, w.a., P. H. Cloth 4to.

Published price Rs. 3.

We are now selling this book at the low price of Rs. 10 only. An early order is requested, as the number to be disposed of is limited.

Apply now to—

MESSRS. T. S. SUBRAMANIA & Co.,

Booksellers, etc., Palghat, India.

The Prabuddha Bharata

— OR —

Awakened India

Annual Subscription including Postage.

For India, and Burma

For Ceylon

For Mauritius

For Foreign Countries, i.e., those not served by the Indian Post

For a Single Copy

Re. 1-8-0

Re. 1-12-0

Re. 2-0-0

3 as. postage 4 anna.

We order will be registered unless accompanied with remittance of the full subscription for a year, or accompanied with directions to collect the same by sending all the back issues of the current volume per V. P. P.

The Awakened India is published regularly on the 1st of each month. Complaints of non-receipt of copies cannot be attended to unless they reach the Manager's hands by the 20th of the month of issue.

Change of address should be communicated so as to reach the Manager by the 25th of the previous month, and invariably accompanied either by the Register number or the former address. Otherwise subscribers should arrange with the Post Office for re-direction.

Agent:- V. C. MOONESAWMY MOODIELAR, Hawaiian, Chief Court, Bangalore.

Travelling Agent:- Mr. M. A. SUBBA AIYAR.

The Atman.—A lecture by Swami Vivekananda. Price As. 2, Postage 4 anna.

All communications to be addressed to

THE MANAGER,

Awakened India, Madras, Madras.
GOODWIN & CO.,
( Successors of T. G. PILLAI & BROS.)
Chemists & Druggists, Mylapore, Madras.

have received per S.S. Matta Husein, large supplies of fresh English and American drugs and patent medicines. Their drugs and medicines are dispensed, with the greatest care and attention, by a princely Hospital Assistant, whose great experience warrants the firm in seeking the confidence and patronage of the public.

Prices Moderate.
Prompt Attention.

The Great Chamundi's Specific for Cholera.

It is a wonderful specific. It was discovered by a great saint whose heart was filled with pity for suffering humanity at the great Arabian Cholera Epidemics. It is prepared from a non-poisonous plant originally derived from Arabia, but now found in different parts of the island of Nigeria. It has been tried with wonderful success in some very bad cases of Cholera, and it is a perfectly safe remedy in the hands of any one who has no fear of the Malaria.

It contains no opium or morphine or any other narcotic drug—the bone of the orthodox treatment of Cholera and the chief ingredient in all Chlorodyne. The use of opium in this disease is as irrational as it is dangerous. It is supposed to check the evacuations, which however are only nature's effort to get rid of the poisonous germs and their products. Such medicines only deaden the sensibility of the intestines and stop their natural movements (peristaltic action as they are technically called) and lead to the bloating of the stomach so frequently seen before death in cases where opium and other narcotics have been administered. Besides, according to the old treatment different medicines are required at different stages of the disease and great caution has to be used in their administration. Whereas in the case of this new specific it is the one remedy to be used in all stages and no other need be thought of. It acts most efficaciously in cases not drugged previously and in those cases where Branly and other alkaline liquids have not been previously administered. If the directions given are faithfully carried out, there is no reason why any case of cholera should not recover.

Every household should possess a bottle of this specific.
Please give it a trial and satisfy yourself.

Directions Accompany Each Bottle.
The Chamundi's Specific for Cholera can be had at THE MANAGER, AWAKENED INDIA, Mylapore, Madras, or of Messes.
GOODWIN Co., Chemists and Druggists, Mylapore, Madras.

Price per 1 oz. Phial Rs. 1-4-0 1/12

Half an ounce of the Specific is more than enough for two cases.

Dr. M. C. N's Antimalarial Pills.

Unsurpassed in efficacy—never falling—have been used with decided success in cases of Malaria and other jungle fevers that were given up as hopeless. They not only attack the liver germs, but also build up the blood cells and thus form the best remedy for the anemic or bloodless condition of the system that results so frequently from attacks of Malarial fever.

Their excellence in cases of enlarged spleen in its early stages may be ascertained by a single trial.

Full directions accompany each bottle.

For a bottle containing 20 pills Rs. 1 As.

Apply sharp to—
GOODWIN & Co.,
Chemists and Druggists,
Mylapore, Madras.

or
THE MANAGER,
AWAKENED INDIA,
Mylapore, Madras.

CANNABINODYNE
The substitute par excellence for Chlorodyne.

An excellent remedy in cases of Diarrhea, Colic, Dysentery, Cholera, Cramps and other spasmodic pains—in short the numerous troubles of Tropical Climates—and in all cases in which Chlorodyne could be used.

It is an unfalling specific in cases of irritable diarrhea, and one or two doses are quite sufficient to cure the disease. It is superior to the many Chlorodynes that are sold in the market. Its superiority consists in its being a clear greenish liquid fluid instead of a dark turbid fluid, and its chief ingredient—the principle derived from the plant of Cannabis Indica—is a great appetizer and never dulls the appetite as many Chlorodynes do. It possesses a most soothing taste. Its effects are marvelous.

In cases of Cholera—next to the Chamundi's specific for Cholera—this is the best remedy. Full directions accompany each bottle.

One ounce phial. Re. 1-0-0.
Half ounce phial. . . . . 0-10-0.

Apply to—
MESSRS. GOODWIN & Co.,
Chemists and Druggists,
Mylapore, Madras.

or
THE MANAGER,
AWAKENED INDIA,
Mylapore, Madras.

[October 1897]
THE

Prabuddha Bhārata

OR

AWAKENED INDIA.

“He who knows the Supreme attains the highest.”—Tait. Upa. II. 1. 1.

The Imitation of Vyasa.*

Man never alone:
Then thinkest: I am single and alone.
Perceiving not the great eternal Sage,
Who dwells within thy breast. Whatever wrong
Is done by thee, he sees and notes it all.

The Mahābhārata.

Heaven, Earth, and Sea, Sun, Moon, and Wind,
And Fire
Day, Night, the Twilights, and the Judge of Souls,
The God of justice and the Heart itself.
All see and note the conduct of a man

What is the nature of God: A certain philosopher was once asked what the nature of God was. He wanted three days to think over the question. On the fourth day the question was repeated and the sage asked for three days more. After that time the question was again asked and the sage wanted another three days and at last said in reply, “The more I think of Him, the more indescribable
He becomes.”

Tit for tat: A Christian missionary was preaching to a crowd in India. Among other sweet things, he was telling the people that if he gave a blow to their idol with his stick, what could it do? One of his hearers sharply answered, “If I abuse your God, what can he do?” “You would be punished,” said the preacher, “when you die.”
“So my idol will punish you when you die,” said the villager.

Love God for love’s sake: The virtuous King Yudhishthira was driven from his throne by his enemies and had

* Under this title will appear such short stories, fables, anecdotes sayings and the like, ancient and modern, as are worthy of the memory of the great Father of the Puranas whose genius delighted in combining instruction with amusement. No originality is claimed for any of these and the greater number are in the words of others.

to take shelter in a forest in the Himalayas with his queen;
and there, one day Draupadi asked him how it was that he should suffer so much misery and yet love God, and Yudhishthira answered: “Behold, my queen, the Himalayas how beautiful they are; I love them. They do not give me anything, but my nature is to love the grand, the beautiful and therefore I love them. Similarly, I love the Lord. He is the source of all beauty, of all sublimity. He is the only object to be loved; my nature is to love Him, and therefore I love. I do not pray for anything; I do not ask for anything. Let Him place me wherever He likes. I must love Him for love’s sake. I cannot trade in love.”

A story of Emerson: One day as Theodore Parker and Ralph Waldo Emerson were walking, in Concord, a man, greatly excited rushed up to them saying: “The world is very near an end.” “Well my friend,” said Emerson, “suppose the world is coming to an end. I suppose I can get along without it.”

How few could say this with confidence, particularly in an age in which “the world is too much with us.”

Where is God: A certain school boy said to another, “Brother, if you tell me where God is, I shall give you a mango.” The latter replied, “I shall give you two mangoes, if you tell me where God is not.”

Transmigration: Muhammad Sharif looking at some large blocks of stone lying about near his house, exclaimed with a sigh, “All these helpless things are only waiting to assume human form.

A simile: There are three dolls—the first made of salt the second made of cloth and the third made of stone. If these dolls be immersed in water, the first will get dissolved and lose its form; the second will absorb a large quantity of water and retain its form; while the third will be wholly impervious to the water. The first doll represents the man who merges his self in the universal and all per-

THE AWAKENED INDIA.

News and Notes.

Sayings of Jesus.—A papyrus recently discovered on the borders of the Libyan desert and believed to have been written between 150 A. D. and 300 A. D. contains eight sayings, the two more remarkable of which are,—"Except ye keep the Sabbath, ye shall not see the Father," and "Jesus saith, Wheresoever there is one, there is I."

The London Spectator rightly points out, that these contain the very essence of Pantheism, and would, if fully accepted, completely modify in the Hindu direction our (the Christian) conception of the universe. If God is in inanimate nature in any sense except that He created it, why should we not as the Hindu argues, worship him there, and draw this further deduction, that God being in everything, everything in some sense is equally holy?

The Sanatan Dharma Palini Sabha, Benares.—We are glad to note that the society gets on well. Its Secretary Mr. Lakshmi Kant Pandey informs us that the other day when he delivered a lecture on Karuna Yoga, its Vice-president Babu Anun Prasad Mukerji made a surprisingly learned and interesting speech.

The Hindu Sammarga Bala Sabha.—This society has inaugurated with its first annual report from which we find it has been doing excellent work and that a healthy religious fervour pervades it. We wish it every success.

The Sanghamitta School, Colombo, Ceylon.—We are glad to publish the following and request our readers' attention to the last paragraph.

The Sanghamita Buddhist girls' school was established in 1890. In '91 my daughter was engaged as Lady Principal in order to bring to bear on it English influences, and to conduct it on English methods though on Buddhist Principles. A fortnight after her arrival she lost her life by an accident, and Mrs. Higgins came as Lady Principal. When Mrs. Higgins left the school, and established the Musara School, the then head teacher, Mrs. Robins, was appointed L. P. pro tempore while there was no English lady available to fill the post. Mrs. Robins is a well-educated Sinhalese lady and a Buddhist. A few months ago I offered my services as Directoress, not as L. P., being too old for the arduous work. I have re-established European methods of working, the Committee, parents, teachers and even the pupils heartily concurring. The boarding part of the educational scheme has never been made a special feature for which the better-class Sinhalese parents quite appreciate, though we are constantly having requests to do so desire it, and the greatest care is bestowed on the Boarders physically as to health and manners, and morally. The mental training they receive in common with the day pupils, six good teachers being at work under my superintendence, and the whole Buddhist school network under an able Buddhist Director.

We shall be glad if any of your readers who are in sympathy with us, will give help, as we are prevented by want of funds to do otherwise we could do.

G. Pickett, Director.

Swami Ramakrishnananda.—A Vedanta class was opened by the Swami in the Hon. and Divan Baladur Rajaratna Moodiar's School, Chintadripet, on Sunday, the 28th ultimo. The Swami explains the Upanishad on every Sunday from 6.30 to 7.30 a.m., and then he holds a question class till 8. The class is well attended by Officials and Medical, College and High School students.

The abode of God.

In the course of his exaltations, Sri Rama met Valmiki in the Chitrakuta mountains and requested him to suggest a place where he could retire and spend his last days in meditation. The sage softly smiled and replied as follows:

"Thyself art the sole and supreme abode for all the worlds, Oh Rama, and the whole creation is Thy place of residence. As Thou sayest however, that Sita (Chit-Sakti) is also to live with Thee, hear, O foremost of the Raghus! what is the proper place for Thee to live in. Dwell in the hearts of the calm and the even-tempered, those who know no hatred or attachment, whom to worship Thee and are satisfied, having performed their only duty in the world. Live, likewise, in the minds of men who are above all desires, above the influence of pleasures and pain and other pairs of opposites, in whom the sense of self has vanished and who dedicate all their actions to Thee. Make a home for self and Sita, Oh Rama, in those who do not get elated with joy nor afflicted with grief, who have no concern for the conventions of the world of Samsara and whose hearts have been stilled in Thy worship by continued oxozise. You will find an excellent home in those who see Thee as being beyond the reach of the six Viksans (last, anger, aversion, &c.), and the cravings of the senses, who see Thee, as pervading all, as the One and the Infinite and as Existence and Consciousness absolute."

-(From the Adhyatmika Ramayana)-

G. S. K.
The Prabuddha Bharata

OR

AWAKENED INDIA.

OCTOBER 1897.

 Faith.

Faith is a necessity of life. Life is impossible without it. And the very first thing we do is to believe. "Thought may shake or strengthen faith: it cannot produce it. Is its origin in the will? No; good will may favour it, ill-will may hinder it, but no one believes by will, and faith is not a duty—it is an instinct, for it precedes all outward instruction: As Count Tolstoi says, "If a man lives, he believes in something. If he did not believe that there is something to live for, he would not live. If he does not see and understand the unreality of the finite, he believes in the finite. If he sees that unreality, he must believe in the infinite. Without faith there is no life."

Man is what he believes. For instance, if he believes that the world is created for him and that his lower self is the God at whose feet he should throw flowers, then he becomes a narrow-minded withered-up little thing, incapable of any great and truly useful achievement. If on the other hand, he believes himself to be one with the mighty all-conscious Soul of the Universe, and sees all things in himself and himself in all things, he becomes God and leaves behind either in the visible world of action and strife, or, in the invisible one of thought and spirit, a legacy which will last for evermore, gathering additional strength in every age, creating numberless Christfs, Buddhhas and Sankaras, and maintaining the world much more really than the blind physical forces which seem to do so. A man's faith thus determines what he is and fixes his place in the Universe.

It should however be clearly recognised that the value of any particular belief is in proportion to its being correct. Faith should at no time be allowed to oppose itself to truth; for all delusions are injurious and hinder the progress of the spirit. It is true that reason does not create faith, but whatever the faith be, it must stand to reason. It is the sanctification of reason which raises faith from a mere instinct to the rank of inspiration. All the great men known to fame and those yet greater, who were beyond its reach, were inspired men, men having tremendous faith which was at the same time reason-proof. The teachings of these men, which form the scriptures of the world, stand on unshakable, eternal verities revealed to them by their sterling faith which had passed through the crucible of reason and become brighter and purer for it. The noble truths of Buddha, the Sermon on the Mount, the Bhagavad Gita and the sublime philosophy of the Upanishads all stand on the unshakable Mahâ Mûrâ of Truth round which the sun, moon and stars have travelled for centuries and will travel for ages without making one syllable of them old and useless for all their incessant rotations. Faith in its highest or rather its real sense is truth and instead of being opposed to reason is built upon it. There is no greater enemy to the world than narrow unenlightened faith. As Amicie observes "That which is a mere prejudice of childhood, which has never known doubt, which ignores science, which cannot respect or understand or tolerate different convictions—such a faith is a stupidity and a hatred, the mother of all fanaticism. . . . To draw the poison-fangs of faith in ourselves, we must subordinate it to the love of truth. The supreme worship of the true is the only means of purification for all religions, all confessions, all sects. Faith should only be allowed the second place; for faith has a judge in truth. When she exalts herself to the position of supreme judge, the world is enslaved; Christianity, from the fourth to the seventeenth century, is the proof of it." Faith should only be allowed the second place; yes, by itself and when unenlightened. But when it weds itself to truth and gets enlightened, it works wonders, it rules the world and sustains it: it 'makes man whole.'

(Reason can write learned books on politics, invent newer and newer engines of destruction, fight battles and conquer nations, argue metaphysically, frame theories about theoretics, analyse, dissect and decompose everything in the outer world: it can 'rift the hills, and roll the waters, flash the lightnings and weigh the sun', but it cannot step one inch beyond the relative and the phenomenal, and much less can it afford any answer to the great and fundamental problems of life; and like the spectre at Macbeth's table, the ghost of the murdered soul grins and groans by turns at the revel of reason. 'The intellect', says Swâmi Vivekânanda, 'is only the street cleaner, cleansing the path for us, a secondary worker.' This is why the sage of Koningsberg said, 'The sphere of faith transcends the sphere of reason. 'Human reason,' says Thomas a Kempis, 'is weak and may be deceived, but true faith cannot be deceived.' 'Faith is the evidence of things not seen.'

This faith is not, as we have already indicated, merely the 'believe in Christ and you will be saved' of the Christian missionary, but faith founded on reason. Blind belief has its uses, but it will, if not in this life at least in some future one. melt away like the 'paradise which lies about us in our infancy' when the fruit of the tree of knowledge is tasted, that is, when awakened reason asserts itself and the problem of evil presses for solution. At a particular stage in human evolution the question of 'to be or not to be' assumes a serious aspect, and

The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune.

The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's life, the low life's虀 weakness, the rich man's傲慢, the sick man's sorrowfulness, the strong man's fall will all tempt man to make 'his quietus with a bare bodkin' and the blind faith in a fatherly and merciful God flies away like darkness before light. Here begins the real search after God. The following is the experience of a great man who passed through this stage. "I said to my self," says Count Tolstoi, "It is well, there is no God, there is none that has a reality apart from my own imaginings, none as real as my own life—there is none such. Nothing, no miracles can prove there is, for miracles exist in my own unreasonable imagination.
THE AWAKENED INDIA. [October 1897.

"And then I asked myself: 'But my conception of the God whom I seek, whence comes it?' And again life flashed joyously through my veins. All around me seemed to revive, to have a new meaning. My joy, though, did not last long; for reason continued to work.

"The conception of God is not God. Conception is what goes on within myself; the conception of God is an idea which I am able to rouse in my mind or not as I choose: it is not what I seek, something without which life could not be." Then again all seemed to die around and within me and again I wished to kill myself.

"After this, I began to retrace the process which had gone on within myself, the hundred times repeated discouragement and revival. I remembered that I had lived only when I believed in God. As it was before, so it was now: I had only to know God, and I lived: I had only to forget Him, not to believe in Him, and I died . . . I should long ago have killed myself if I had not had a dim hope of finding Him . . . A voice seemed to cry within me: 'This is He, He without whom there is no life. To know God and to live are one. God is life.'

"Live to seek God, and life will not be without Him. And stronger than ever rose up life within and around me, and the light that then shone never left me again."

Pretty nearly the same experience is described by the poet in the following words:

If ever when faith had fallen asleep,
I heard a voice 'Believe no more,'
And heard an ever-breaking shore,
That tumbled in the Godless deep:

A warmth within the heart would melt
The freezing reason's colder part,
And, like a man in wrath, the heart
Stood up and answered 'I have felt.'

Here is the resurrection of faith, but it is yet in the clouds, owing most probably to the unspiritual character of modern Christendom. 'Where all are blind, the one-eyed man is king' is the saying and the final realisation of Count Tolstoi is looked upon by him as a sufficient recompense for the mental agitation he suffered, only because he is in modern Europe where spirituality is at a low ebb. Had he been in India, he would have pushed on the search farther, and would never have rested till he saw God face to face, and the stage through which he passed is just the stage in which, in the blessed Gana Bhumik (land of wisdom) of ours, the great Guru (Parama Acharya) appears, and with a love which looks for no reward and purer in its nature than the love of father, mother, husband and wife and altogether divine, gives his protecting hand to the despairing soul and takes it on by successive steps through the straight old path of the seers, to its final destination. Ah, in what words can one divine Guru be praised? where is the language which could give words to express the greatness and the wisdom of the Guru! The disciple sings:

स्वामी वीवेकानंद श्रीमानं शान्ति पासुबन्धु शर्मनीरमीतीति।
सत्यं शास्त्रमूकमस्य शर्मनीरमीति।
निर्यास्तदाविस्फोटकं निश्चितं ज्ञानसंस्कारं।
प्रसन्नमिव परमविमं श्रावं पवित्रतःमिव।
प्रसन्नात्मलेश्वरस्वरूप: विषयस्यत्सिद्धश्रवण्योपूर्वी।

But it is not satisfied. There is only one language which could express it all and that is the language of faith, implicit faith. This faith is not blind. It is most rational, for the Guru first convinces the disciple, satisfies his intellect and then storms and captures his heart. The teacher wants not mere Srddhâ, faith, but also Viveka, discrimination, and both are reckoned in the Vedânta as necessary qualifications for the student and the highest experience which the Guru reveals is supported not merely by the Brâhman, but also stands to reason and is confirmed by realisation. Faith in the Guru is not then a blind belief; intellectual and reason are not to be smothered and crushed, but fed and satisfied; until they lie in perfect confidence and repose without wanting to assert themselves. The Guru says not merely 'Believe and you will be saved' but 'Believe only if it stands to reason, and if it so stands, then have firm faith in it; for mere intellectual assent avails nothing.' The heart cannot ignore the head, for then intellect will come again; or other prove a 'vitor in the camp' and have its revenge, but both the head and the heart must be satisfied, though it is the latter that finally receives inspiration. Faith in the Guru then is not mere belief. This faith is even superior to devotion, for there is no difference in it between the teacher and the taught, as there is between the devotee and the object of his devotion. The disciple worships and loves the Guru as his own Self and the Guru also loves the disciple as he loves himself. There is no duality in this faith; it is all bliss and no two souls meet together in closer union than those of the Guru and the disciple. They understand each other as no others do; they love each other with no human love; they are both one in reality—they are one God not two. The Advaitânt (non-duality) between the Guru and disciple is first realised and immediately after the Ekameva (the only one) of the universe. The nature of this faith is total self-surrender and the literal carrying out of the Guru's instructions, and its ultimate expression is maha, for it has been said, 'The man of faith obtains wisdom.'

This faith in one's Guru, in the Christ, or in other words in one's Self (the higher Self) asks for no favours, for what could he who has such faith ask for, being above desire and seeing nothing outside himself. But exactly for this reason every event in his life is a genuine miracle and divine in its nature, for says Sri Krishna, "I bear the burden of the concerns in the life of those who are constantly employed in worshipping Me" (Gita, IX, 22).

Swami Vivekananda rightly says, "As certain religions of the world say a man who does not believe in a personal God outside of himself is an atheist, so, says the Vedânta, a man who does not believe in himself is an atheist. Not believing in the glory of your own soul is what the Vedânta calls atheism." This however should be properly understood. Tosay 'I can do anything and everything' just as Napoleon is reported to have said, 'Thou shalt have none other gods but me' is Asuric (worthy of Asuras) and utterly incompatible with the Satvic humility which is the characteristic of the sage. The 'I' should not refer to the lower ego which should be killed, but to the higher Self the only reality. We shall make our meaning clearer by an example. A ship in which Julius Caesar was a passenger, was overtaken by a storm and the captain feared for the safety of the crew when Caesar said 'Fear not man. Do thou not know who is in the ship? This is an example of rajus pure and simple, of faith in oneself, in one's lower ego which is a cause of bondage and misery. On a very similar occasion the Christian Saint Ignatius said, 'The winds and the seas obey our Lord' and betrayed not the least apprehension or fear, but he was a little troubled in mind that he had not served God as he ought to have done. There was more of Satwa in this, but for the best example of faith is that of the Indian sage whom Alexander threatened to kill and who replied, "Me you can never kill. I am He, the eternal and infinite. Me sword cannot pierce, fire cannot burn, water cannot moisten nor winds wither. How could I be slain?" To be always filled with the idea of one's being the Atman is real faith and this is the Karmaphalatayam (abandonment of the fruits of one's action) of the Gita, the Sahaja stiti (the free, natural state of Self-realisation) of the Vedanta and its immediate results are fearlessnes and peace of mind. Come what may and go what may, it always remains unshaken, for it is permanently wedded to eternity.

The Heroism of a Missionary's Life.

"I hear that you are going away, Millic, is that so?"
"Yes, I'm going next week, guess where?"
"O, I can't!"
"Well, don't faint; I'm going to... China! and as a Missionary!"
"Millic, you are joking!"
"No, Miriam, I'm not joking at all, next week I will be bound for China as a Missionary! You know that has been my desire since a little girl when first I went to Sunday school. Ah! you do not know what a pleasure, intense joy it will be to spread the doctrine of our perfect religion—Christianity."

"But, Millic, have you thought of what you are doing? Thought not only of the voyage, your new environments, and the burst of feeling that will be set free, but of the effect on the Chinese also? They are brought up under circumstances far different from ours, and facts and ideas that we consider, never dream of as existing literally bound to them from generations back. There they peacefully attend to their own duties hardly dreaming of such a disturbance as an American missionary. Dare you tear their ancient doctrines from their souls, dig them up by the root, tell them that they are wrong, and—"
"Miriam!"
"Yes, I mean it. Can't you understand? See the world through the Chinaman's eye and it will look very different. You cannot teach a baby logic, much less put Christian views into a follower of Confucius. Dare you criticize their God? Does not He, the same, watch over all his children? We understand the doctrines of the Chinese as little as they do ours."
"Miriam! how do you ask men who you are a Christian?"
"Yes, I am, but don't you understand me? don't you see that if you only look on your side of the question it will be one-sided? Indeed, you are doing a very noble thing to give up your own dear land and live a stranger among heathen, and more noble still it is, more heroic that you give up all those endearing home ties that alone make life bearable sometimes; but do you do good to any one else? That is what you are striving to do, I think."
"Miriam, Miriam, how do you do torn things, and how funny you see everything. Think of our glorious religion which has made us what we are—the most civilized of all nations—compare that religion with the empty formulæ of the Chinese, and then ask me if I am doing good to any one else. They do not realize how glorious it is to have a Christ and then, Miriam, has any other religion direct revelation from God?"
"Well, I don't know."
"You don't know, Miriam?"
"No; do you?"
"Miriam!!"
"Yes, I know you think me terrible but let me illustrate my view of the case. Here you live in New York and wish to reach Paris; in Asia, let us suppose, is your friend who also is bound for Paris: you two cannot reach your destination by the same route, you must take different paths but in the end reach the same place. So with the Heathen and the Christian, they are on different spiritual planes and must therefore take different roads, but in the end reach the same goal. To say that the religion of Confucius is wrong is as absurd as to exclaim: 'There is no language except the English, all others are mere delusions!' But, Millic, no one can deny that a Missionary's life is heroic and proves how firmly fixed are the roots of Christianity, when you are willing to live amid strangers the Christian's life of patience, peace, and purity."

"Well, Miriam, time will tell; we'll know better a few years from now."
"Yes, and when many years have passed, years of labor and heroism, pain and misunderstanding, when the lesson of tolerance shall have been learned by bitter experience, then Millic I am sure that each heart, whether Jewish or Buddhist, Christian or Pagan shall in the fulness of its love exclaim:

'Master, not one but all; in every style, in every tongue thy sacred name shall echo.'"

SIR E. SWANESER.

Seekers after God.

(Continued from page 30.)

The second question: "I say that this king is a virtuous man; try and deny it if you can," Pooch Videsan Kālihāla was startled at the question. "To say that the king is a wicked man and that in his own presence this young chap has contrived a very good device for finishing my life. If I keep quiet I shall be defeated, but to reply would be much more disastrous, for the king's sword would immediately be at my neck. There is still a third question, I shall see if I cannot answer that at least," said he to himself and kept quiet; the queen's face grew radiant with joy and the crowd of spectators expressed its satisfaction in no mistakeable fashion.

Then came the third and last question: "I say that the queen is chaste, deny it if you can." Kālihāla was thunderstruck. He saw that he was undone. He hung down his head with shame at having suffered himself to be defeated so easily by a schoolboy—be that had put to..."
shame and deprived of titles, honors and all, many a renowned scholar. "What foolishness," he said to himself, "not to have known the simple thing that there are many statements which cannot be denied and to have rashly undertaken to deny anything that might be affirmed. And then such questions—who could have put them except this little microbe that you triumphed over my own rain? I worked out my own ruin. Why did I not persist that it was unworthy of me to enter into a discussion with a school boy? now the event has proved me unworthy to sit on an equal seat with him and all that I have to do is to get up, deliver over all my insignia as the court-pundit and kiss the dust of his feet." Accordingly he rose from his seat and stood the very picture of shame in mute confession of his defeat, to the laughter and ridicule of the spectators, who had all along been wishing for such a consummation.

The queen at once called Yamanacharya to her and embracing him like a mother covered him over with kisses and said, 'You are really A'lawandar', i.e., one that has come to rule; and henceforth he was called A'lawandar by all the people.

The king occupied his ex-pundit's position and addressing A'lawandar he said; "It is true you have won the day. You are a boy-prodigy, a veritable avatar. I am very much rejoiced at your success, but can you deny at least one of the three statements that you made?" The boy coolly replied, "I can deny all the three" at which the king was exceedingly surprised and asked how.

A'lawandar replied, 'In the first place, the pundit's mother is a barren woman according to the well-known saying, 'One tree is not a garden, nor one child a child.' To have only one child, as the pundit's mother has, is practically equal to having no children at all, and so she is a barren woman.

"Secondly, the king is not a virtuous man as according to the Nethisidasya—moral saying—'Baja rasbra kirtan-papam' the sins of his subjects go to him.

"Thirdly, the queen is not chaste, for like every other Hindoo woman, she at the time of marriage first dedicated to the Gods Agni, Varuna, Indra and others."

The king was very much surprised and pleased at these replies, and at once ordered A'lawandar to be proclaimed, according to his promise to the queen, king over a considerable portion of his dominions and placed poor Klokhal at his disposal. A'lawandar accepted the kingdom, but set Klokhal free.

A'lawandar, though so young, wielded the sceptre with wonderful dignity and justice and was very much liked by his subjects. He was thus reigning for many years, and then there occurred an event which has preserved his name from that death, which has fallen to the lot of those of numberless other clever scholars and wise kings. This event was even more romantic in character and more important in its consequences, than the preceding one which made him a king and therefore deserves to be described in some detail. When A'lawandar was about 35 years old, a certain old Brahmin, Rana Misra, otherwise known as Muanakal Kambi sought admission to the royal presence. Seeing that he was too poor to be treated with consideration, and thinking that, if he introduced himself in the usual way, his message might not be received at its worth he contrived a curious means of approaching A'lawandar. He first acquired the friendship of the head cook of the palace, and requested him to cook and serve the king a particular kind of vegetable, which he undertook to bring himself every day. This vegetable, is Satue in character and is very much liked by Yogis, being both sedative and medicinal. Kambi supplied this vegetable very regularly and it was cooked and served as regularly on the royal table.

A few months elapsed in this fashion and A'lawandar had got accustomed to this article of diet, when one day Nambi purposely stayed away without bringing it. A'lawandar not finding it on his table, asked his cook why it had not been prepared. The cook who knew nothing of the plot laid by Nambi, simply said, "The Brahmin did not bring it today." "The Brahmin! Who?" asked A'lawandar in surprise and, on being informed that a certain poor Brahmin was supplying it regularly, ordered that he should be brought to his presence the very next time he appeared. Nambi brought the vegetable the next day, and as he had anticipated was taken to the king.

A'lawandar experienced a peculiar kind of emotion, when Nambi approached him and felt as if they had been friends for a long time and, rising from his seat, welcomed him cordially and inquired what the purpose was of his supplying that vegetable and whether he wanted any favor from him. Nambi replied, "Yes, I want a favor from your royal highness; and that is that you will be pleased to take hold of a secret treasure which your grandfather has entrusted to me to be given over to you in proper time. I have come to request you to take charge of that treasure and deliver it from the burden of the trust." A'lawandar thought that the thing might be true, as his grandfather Nathamami Swami was one of the most celebrated men of his time and particularly fond of him. He was but a child when the Swami died, and it appeared likely to him that he might have left him a great legacy stored up in some secret place to be taken hold of when sufficiently old. Besides he was on the eve of a war with a neighboring king and sadly wanted money. So he eagerly asked Nambi where that treasure lay and how he might obtain it. Nambi replied, "I will show it to you if you go with me. It is between two rivers and within seven successive walls. A huge serpent guards it and a Rakshasa from the south set comes and visits it once in twelve years. It has been hid in by a mantra, and it can be recovered only by means of that secret mantra and with the help of a peculiar herb of rare virtues, and not by means of more animal sacrifices like other ordinary treasures. It is a very vast treasure and by obtaining it you will become much richer than any other king on earth. By securing it, you can easily vanquish all your enemies, and no one can ever defeat you. It is a great legacy which your celebrated grandfather Nathamami Swami has left to you out of love. Pray take hold of it and deliver me from my responsibility." A'lawandar asked, "Is it so valuable and vast a treasure?" and said, "How good of my grandfather! and how good of you not to have appropriated it yourself, but kept the trust. I shall start immediately with my army." Nambi said, "The earlier you start, the better: but you must come alone; such even is your grand-father's order." "Be it so then" said A'lawandar and set out with Nambi the very next day, making arrangements for the administration of his kingdom during his absence.

M. Ranganatha Sastri,

(To be continued.)

"Thou canst not prove the Nameless;
For nothing worthy proving can be proven.
Nor yet disproven: therefore, Thou be wise,
Clear away the sunnier side of doubt.
And cling to Faith beyond the forms of faith!"

An Ancient Sage.
There is one more wonderful phenomenon connected with our lives, without which "who will be able to live, who will be able to enjoy life a moment?"—the idea of freedom.

This is the idea that guides every footstep of ours, makes our movements possible, determines our relations to each other—nay, is the very warp and woof in the fabric of human life. Intellectual knowledge tries to drive it inch by inch from its territory, post after post is snatched away from its domains, and each step is made fast and iron bound with the railroading of cause and effect. But it laughs at all our attempts, and, lo, it keeps from above all this massive pile of law and causation with which we tried to smother it to death. How can it be otherwise? The limited always requires a higher generalization of the unlimited to explain itself. The bound can only be explained by the free, the caused by the uncaused.

But again the same difficulty is also here. What is free? The body, or even the mind? It is apparent to all that they are as much bound by law as anything else in the universe.

Now the problem resolves itself into this dilemma: Either the whole universe is a mass of never ceasing change and nothing more, irreversibly bound by the law of causation, not one particle having a unity of itself, yet is curiously producing an irrevocable delusion of permanence and freedom, or there is in us and in the universe something which is permanent and free, and that the basal constitutional belief of the human mind is not a delusion.

It is the duty of science to explain facts by bringing them to a higher generalization. Any explanation, therefore, that wants to destroy first, a part of the facts given to be explained in order to fit itself to the remainder is not science, whatever else it may be.

Now, any explanation that wants to overlook the fact of this persistent and all necessary idea of freedom commits the aforementioned mistake of denying a portion of the fact in order to explain the rest, and is therefore wrong.

The only other alternative possible, then, is to acknowledge in harmony with our nature, that there is something in us which is free and permanent.

But it is not the body; neither is it the mind. The body is dying every minute. The mind is constantly changing. The body is a combination. So is the mind, and as such can never reach to a state beyond all change.

But beyond both this momentary sheathing of gross matter, beyond even the minor covering of the mind, is the Atman, the true self of man, the permanent, the ever free.

It is his freedom that is percolating through layers of thought and matter, and in spite of the colorings of name and form, is ever asserting its unshackled existence. It is his deathlessness, his bliss, his peace, this divinity in humanity that shines out and makes itself felt in spite of the thickest layers of ignorance. He is the real man, the fearless one, the deathless one, the free.

Now, freedom is only possible when no external power can exert any influence, produce any change. Freedom is only possible to the being who is beyond all conditions, all bondages of cause and effect. In other words, the unchangeable alone can be free and therefore immortal.

This being, this Atman, this real self of man, the free, the unchanging, is beyond all conditions, and as such it has neither birth nor death.

Without birth or death, eternal, ever existing is this soul of man.
Radha and Krishna.

THE CONFESSIONS OF AN HONEST GOD.

Radha felt a little consoled with the idea that she had conquered the heart of Krishna and made him her slave as it were. The Lord, whose observation nothing could escape, understood this and wanted to make fun of her. One day while they were alone together, the cunning Krishna with a view to draw her out fully, suddenly laughed a little and then kept quiet. Radha observing it, asked him what the matter was. Krishna replied, "Nothing. O Radha of coral lips, nothing very particular. Only I laughed to see how all this world is under my control, with all its inhabitants and how great I am."

A few seconds passed and then Radha abruptly laughed and kept quiet. Krishna asked in his turn what the matter was, and she said, "Nothing. O Krishna, only you are the ruler of the whole world and I am your ruler. The thought of this caused me to laugh." "Who will not become your slave?" replied the gallant God. "To grudge to pay homage to your divine beauty! A passing glance from that lotus-eye would enslave all the three worlds!" and so saying he clasped her in his arms, and after a general conversation for some time left her.

A few days after, she sent word to her lover to meet her alone on the silver sands of the Jumna at evening time. All the day was spent by her in decorating herself and otherwise preparing for the joyful meeting. She wavered for a long time between this and that and at last chose one which she thought would best please Krishna. She was already all grace summed up, put on her best earrings, her best necklaces, and bangles all of gold, and with exquisite taste made a splendid nosegay of sweet-smelling flowers just blown, with a beautiful blue one in the middle and a lily-white one by its side, to represent Krishna and herself surrounded by a galaxy of adoring damsels. She combed her dark, long soft hair and wore it in a peculiarly charming fashion ranging. This is a worthy net for so beautiful a prey." Having thus decorated herself, and holding the sweet nosegay in her hand, she, the wonder of her kind, presented herself before a mirror which, inanimate as it was, seemed to feel pride in reflecting the form of so fair a person. Radha sweet, humorous, fairy like Radha 's daughter of the gods divinely tall and most divinely fair" draw to her full height her stately form and looked at herself in the glass: "Beauti

When the sun was about to set, she quietly stole out of her house. A perfect miracle of beauty, with flowers, fruit and cakes in her hand, leaving her domestic duties to take care of themselves, and by a secret path arrived at a lovely retreat on the Jumna bank, where herself and her lover had spent many a memorable evening. The mighty river, the beautiful sands, the dark grove behind, the white rock on which they used to sit, the stately trees that gave shelter to them, the peacock, the deer and the nightingale, which seemed to enjoy their presence, the wild flowers, the music-making bamboo trees, the red bushes, the irregular rocks close by and the rills like girls playing, flowing from them and adding to the waver wealth of the Jumna, all those were there, lending a strange charm to the place, but not Krishna who was more wonderful and more charming than all of them. He was not there and Radha, who was but a moment ago so light of spirit and so light of foot was filled with surprise, but she consulted herself with the thought that he would soon come; five, ten, fifteen minutes and half an hour had passed and Krishna had not come. She fancied she heard a rustling among the plants, thought that he was there, perhaps wantonly hiding himself and called him in tones which the amorous air drank in eagerly, "Govinda, Govinda, Marâri, Mukunda, Krishna, Radharâmanu", but her words were as a voice in the wilderness. The sun was setting but Krishna had not come.

The sky assumed a deeper blue, but he who was bluer still and worth a thousand skies, he was not yet come. The birds had returned to their nests, cows had entered their sheds and even workmen had gone back to their homes and wives, but the tenant Murari was yet far away from his house in her soft baby lesson.

It was a 'beauties evening calm and free' and everything around her was in a state of perfect peacefulness and repose. The majestic Jumna flowed in a slow noiseless pace, the birds had stopped singing, even the trees were silent. The sky overhead was a waveless ocean of undisturbed blue, and all nature was in a state of Munra (silence) like a sage in Nârada. The coolness in the outer world tended by contrast only to increase the agitation in poor Radha's heart. "Will he not come? No, no, he will not fail to come when I have asked him to come. He will come with the moon," she thought. But soon came the beautiful moon, but instead of bringing the silh-clad, dancing Krishna, it only spread its silver rays around and rejoiced over Radha's anguish. She looked up at the heartless moon and got incensed against the tenant lover. "I will never forgive this insult—ah, this moonlight! it burns me—i will have nothing more to do with him and when he comes I will send him and turn away. He has left me to perish under these chilling rays of this cold moon and pierced by Cupid's darts, while he is happy elsewhere. I will show him that I too can be cruel. I will come and beg my favor, then I will 'spurn him and turn away' simply as he said to himself. But all this anger was ineffectual as Krishna did not make his appearance. Often she thought of returning home, but had not the heart to do so. A something which she would not confess detainted her. It was not the love for Krishna, she said, for she had ceased to love him. But then why did she stay? Gradually her anger gave way to grief and looking at herself and at the nosegay in her hand which had begun to fade as if it reflected her grief, she exclaimed, "I am really unhonored of him. What am I to him who is like the god of love to woman? To have thought that I had him under my control and to have said so to him! yes I now see my folly; like the elephant which throws mud over its own head, I am myself the author of my misfortune." She felt exceedingly humiliated and began to weep.

True humility and repentance had taken hold of her and she sat on a rock praying to the gods for Krishna's arrival. She was expressing the divinest grief, and wistfully looking in the direction from which he would be coming, when all at a sudden she felt the soft hands of her Krishna on her heart and heard the soft music of his divine flute beside her. She was close to her ear. At once she turned with lightning-swiftness and the voice and the hand also seemed to turn with her and as quickly. She turned and turned, but they were always behind her and she could not get at the hand. Her Swi was pulled with jerks, pulled now tightly, now gently, and she stretched back her hand to capture the criminal with whom she pretended to be very angry; but every time he recoiled bending her body backwards. Then she made a sudden turn behind when lo! her lover seemed to fly up in the air and looking up, she saw him surrounded by a galaxy of Gopis. At once a crowd of feelings rushed into her heart and for a moment she remained confused. The vision endured for a short time and then she saw Krishna alone wherever she turned. He was behind, before, on the right side, on the left, above, below, everywhere. Charming was it; but she was not able to endure it and piteously implored her lover like Arjuna in the Gita to disillusion her. "O Krishna, O Govinda, O Murari, I beg of you O Radha-ramana, cease this deceiving sport. Tell me where thou really art and assure me of thy love. I am frightened, comfort me O lord, show me thy form. O thou art much too great a match for me—a silly little girl. I had fancied I had completely won you and entered your yoke. O Gopala, permit thou all my past foolishness and show me thy loving face and comfort me," she cried. At once she heard the gentle reassuring sound of the flute and she felt a strange sense creeping over her that she had somehow become Krishna. It was blissful, immeasurably blissful. She was not Radha, she had got transformed, metamorphosed into Krishna. She was Krishna and Krishna was herself. A new world of unalloyed bliss had been revealed to her and she stood speechless with joy. She had forgotten herself, she had forgotten her household duties, her little joys and sorrows and with them the vast outer world. All these had ceased to exist for her, for she was one with her lover. How long she stayed in this blissful state, she did not know for she was dead to time, but when she awoke she saw that it was morning.

Krishna pretended to be sleeping by her side with a face on which the most prominent expression was that of perfect innocence and simplicity. She woke him up without scruple, for she knew that he was not really sleeping and he rose from the couch rubbing his eyes and asking if the day had come so soon. Radha took hold of his hands and energetically pressing them between her said, 'Thou canst no longer afford to deceive me. I have brought thee to book' and added

"Confess that thou art a hypocrite. Thou dost pretend to sleep, while thou art really awake. Thou art beyond both night and day, all wakeful, absolute Satchidananda as now I saw, yet pretend'st to sleep and snore. Art thou not then a hypocrite?"

Krishna replied, "Yes, I am a hypocrite but not to those who know that I am so. To them I am all simplicity and plainness."

Radha: "Art thou not a liar, thou who hast created this lie of the world?"

Krishna: "I confess I am a liar; but not wholly, for in this confession I speak the truth. Besides I do not lie to those that seek me; and when they see the liar the lie of the world vanishes."

Radha: "Confess that thou art a deceiver because thou deceivest us with the idea that we are separate from thee."

Krishna: "I confess I am a deceiver! But I deceive only those who, thinking themselves separate, have already deceived themselves and are eager to be deceived still more."

Radha: "Confess that thou art a thief, for thou steal'st away the bliss of Self-realisation from men, blinding their vision by Maya."

Krishna: "I am not a thief but the prince of thieves, Taksalinampati as the Vedas say. But I rob only those that are careless of their Self."

Radha: "Confess that thou art cruel, for thou seest to delight in the suffering of all creatures: What is sport to thee is death to them."

Krishna: "I am cruel to all who are cruel to me, to the worldly-minded who kill me the Self in them (Atmanah). But I am kind even when I am cruel, for there is happiness even in grief. Besides I take all to me in the due course and leave none to perish uncared for."

Radha: "Confess that thou art immoral and unchaste, for thou hast as many favors as there are sands on the sea shore."

Krishna: "I confess I am very very unchaste. All things in this world are my illegitimate children and every soul is a secret favorite of mine, with whom I indulge in all sorts of play and whom I flatter, tease and coax by turns until they forget their passion for personal adornment and love me for my own sake, as thou dost me, when I absorb them all in me."

Radha was delighted with these honest confessions and exclaimed, "O God, I rejoice that thou art a hypocrite, a liar, a deceiver, a thief and cruel, immoral and unchaste and Thou art I and I am Thou."

Reader! try to understand the above story before you criticise it. Radha had not won Krishna when she vainly thought she had, but when she repented for her vanity and became humble she obtained Krishna, nay she became Krishna. To put it in the language of the Upanishad, Brahma is known by him who thinks that He is not known: he who thinks that Brahma is known does not know Brahma. Brahma is unknown to those who think they know Him and known to those who do not think they know Him."

(Ken. Up. II. 3, see Sankara's Commentary on this."

Ah! How fond are we in India of the hypocritical, lying, deceiving, thievish, cruel and immoral Krishna—Jara Chora Sikhāmani!"

__ Kumaun—in the Himalayas. __

(Continued from page 31.)

Kumaun being a part of the Uttara-Khasa has been through all times visited by a large number of ascetics of various sects from the plains. Most of them simply pass through it on their way to the shrines of Kedar and Badrikasram, a few settle in different places in Kumaun. Through contact with those the majority of people here have a good grounding in the theories of Vedanta, but all the same in other parts of India—there is an indigenous religion which being simpler and tender and more practical has more sway over the masses than the higher spiritual ideals. Above all, these simple people believe that they are in constant touch with the Devas; and on all occasions, either when one is ill or any other mishap befalls a family—they seek the aid of a Devata. This Devata enters the body of a villager who is a sort of especial favorite with him, and through him the Devata cureth the sick and delivers his worshipper from danger. The general sign of a Devata having entered some one is a curious kind of shaking all over and an irresistible fit of dancing—and friends are never wanting to help the obsessed by giving him a little music of flutes and drums.

Of all these Devatas who look after the well-being of the Kumaonis, none can boast of a larger number of followers, or evoke greater devotion than Shem.
Shem is the most popular and living Devata of the pahareesa* and his circle of Devotees is a continuously increasing one. Tradition says that Shem was a king of Kumaun in old times, that he was a very good and just ruler and towards the latter part of his life became a yogi, and a disciple of Goraksha Nath. After travelling through various parts of India—Shem settled on the top of a mountain now known as Shem Dhura. Here he ended his days—and on the spot a temple has been built and the Devotees from all parts of Kumaun flock to the place twice in the year.

Now, whatever might have been the power of Shem when he was actually in the flesh over his people, he certainly wields more power over his people now he is in spirit. For Shem is the mightiest of the helpful Devatas, and an appeal to him in sickness or distress never fails. And most wonderful is this worship of Shem. In almost every village there is a person who from time to time becomes the mouth-piece of Shem. Shem's followers at the same time enter the bodies of certain other villagers of Jews satiated till the person obsessed by Shem and his other disciples at the same time will be talking and performing wonders through hundreds of persons in different localities.

On our way back to Almora from a visit to this Shem Dhura peak, we chanced to meet with two parties going to worship Shem at a place called Danna-nana. Each party had formed a procession—composed of villagers, their female relatives and children, while in each there were several men performing a curious shaking dance as they went on to the music of flutes and drums. We became curious, having heard of this worship and this is what we learnt and saw. The leaders whose bodies Shem himself uses to have to fast and pray and keep themselves very clean for several weeks before Shem manifests himself in them. Men and women are equally recipients of Shem's favour—but the above-mentioned parties happened to have men leaders. The worship consists of various sacrifices and offering of food to the Shrine. One of the parties was composed of Brahmins, the other of Dones or Chandalas. The 'Brahmin' party were kind and respectful to us and postponed their worship till our arrival. When we arrived, we saw a number of men with intelligent and handsome faces, as Brahmins of these parts generally are, sitting round a blazing fire—their wives and other female relatives sitting separate at a distance from the blaze. The beginning of the performance was the starting of the music, and in a few minutes we saw several of the men shaking all over, and all of a sudden all of them except the leader started up and began a sort of slow dance round and round the fire. In a short time the music began to quicken and the shaking more violent. The leader then began to address them, in a sort of loud, nasal monotone, as Shem himself—on various religious and moral topics, which finished, he took in his hands several knotted whips made of woven munja bark strings attached to a wooden handle—there were about 11 or twelve of these strings attached to each stick and they were altogether very formidable to look at. Then he placed two iron instruments in the form of an iron handle a foot long with a flat blade six inches by six attached at right angles to the handle. These he placed in the fire to make red hot. This done he distributed the whips to his dancing disciples, one of whom came forward and bared his upper limbs, another took a firm hold of the whip-handle and began to lay on with all his might, till he could strike no more, through sheer exhaustion. The whip-ped-man then took up the role of whipper and bedaubed his friend as unmercifully as he had done him. Other pairs followed undergoing the same performance. Before they began we had asked them to allow us to examine the whips and gently struck our arms with one of the cords. It smarted for more than a minute. We expected therefore the blood to gush out at every stroke, but to our surprise there was neither no blood nor a single scar on any part of their bodies, not even a black spot. The closest scrutiny could not detect even a mark. The leader now got up and took off all his clothes except a piece about his loins, and told us that through the mercy of his Guru, he was going to perform the most difficult part of his worship. He then drew out one of the iron instruments of the fire, with a firm grasp on the red-hot handle and brought it near us for inspection. Not only the colour but heat was a sufficient guarantee of its being a genuine piece of red-hot iron and we were quite satisfied. He then turned the red-hot shovel upside down, with the flat spade-like part turned against his body and began to draw it all over his body—his face, his head—till at last he finished by opening his mouth and putting it inside. He kept the end in his mouth for about two minutes and then drew it out and threw it on the ground. The glow was gone, yet the heat was still so great as to make it impossible for us to get hold of it without burning our hand. He underwent the same process with the other spade and after another short address to his disciples, he sat down quite composed. His body did not shake any more, for Shem had left him for the time. In his case also there was not the least injury even to his skin and not a hair of his head burnt.

The other party underwent the same performance with the exception that among them we saw several place their hands for minutes inside the blazing flame; without the least hurt to themselves. And when we warned them to take care of their flowing garments, which they were dragging through the fire in their shaking-dance round the flame, they replied that flame had lost all power for the time over them and their clothes.

Two women then advanced near the central fire from among the crowd suffering from some disease for a long time. The leader gave each of them a few blows with the palm of his left hand and then got hold of a lock of hair of each and tied several knots in each. One knot is to be opened every morning and the day the last knot is untied, the disease will disappear entirely.

Such is one of the many most curious forms of worship still to be found in India. The facts related here are just what we saw. The worshippers were simple village folk and not professionals, who were on their way to their favorite Shrine, and every evening during the journey this worship was carried on. The last was performed on top of the mountain Shem Dhura, which finished, they returned back to their homes—the simple peasants as they ever were. We invite the readers of your widely read journal to find a rational solution of this worship.

Yours faithfully,
A TRAVELLER IN THE HIMALAYAS.

"Look not for Truth, in childish hopes and tears,
In vain beliefs of ages, quick or dead.
Seek in thy-self, deep hidden in each heart—
There, and there only, lies the Well of Truth."
True Greatness of Vasudeva Sastry.

By T. C. Natarajan.

CHAPTER XI.

Rukmani told Vasudeva Sastry: "He (her husband) did not come to me for a long time after all in the house had returned to bed, but kept waiting outside the wicked Siddha's room. I went to him twice or thrice and entreated him with tears in my eyes to go to bed; but for all that I was rewarded only with abuses; and when I persisted in my entreaties, he kicked me and sent me away to my room weeping. Immediately I heard the Siddha's room open, and a few minutes after, my husband came to me with a small bottle in hand which he held concealed. He came to me only because he was afraid I might go down and cause a commotion in the house. Seating himself by my side he looked at me sternly for some time and then poured on me a volley of abuses.

"I said, 'I seek to stand in your way, Rukmani. You look upon me as if your mortal enemy. O God, I do not know when you will be pleased to recall me from this world!' He replied, 'Yes. You are my real enemy. But for you,'—Then he stopped. "You should have run away with this wicked, so-called Siddha.' He kicked me once again saying, 'Why do you abuse my burn? You wretched rogue. I am really going to run away. Who is there who can prevent me? Better to run to the forests and die there unknown than to continue in this world of woe and with a wicked ass like you.' I could say nothing. I was choked with grief and fear. Then he coaxed me a little saying that he did not mean what he said. More than an hour passed in mutual explanations and peace-making, and a sufficiently good understanding had been established between us when suddenly he raised the glass in his hand and swallowed a few drops from it, saying that it was a good sleeping draught which he drank as it was very late in the night and wanted to have a sound sleep, and gave me also to drink of the same which I did. Hardly had a few seconds elapsed since I took it when I felt a strange sense of stupor creeping over me and drowning me in sleep. I saw nothing more and woke only on account of the disturbance in the house and to find that he was gone. I am a ruined girl. Nothing remains for me but to die. If he does not come in four or five days I shall put an end to my life. That is all.'

Vasudeva Sastry said that in a fortnight's time he was sure to bring him back and comfort her and started on his expedition by the very next train towards the north; for he saw that Sreenivasan should have gone only northward as the only train that left Madura between twelve and three in the night went in that direction.

Meanwhile great things were going on in Dindigul. My readers will be pleased to recall to their minds our sakti-friend Mr. Nayana Sastry summoned the "wild cat." We also remember that he was calculating to become suddenly rich through his child whose name I forgot to mention before was Kunnu. The result of his calculation was that Krishna's mother who was a cousin of his and very affectionate towards him should be made to adopt the dirty child Kunnu on the authority of a will by her late husband, which was not in existence but to be forged and which should be made to say that all the estates of the family were the personal acquisition and therefore the private property of her husband. It was to state explicitly that, as Krishna was very sickly from his infancy, the estates should go to him only if he survived his mother and that otherwise they should go to her and through her to any one whom she might choose to adopt. The plan was in due course revealed to Krish- na's mother and with the help of an expert forger a will was drawn upon a sufficiently old looking paper with the signatures of a number of persons who were bribed into the deed. The adoption too would have been completed, but fortunately or unfortunately it had to be postponed for three months, as that interregnum period was not un- suspicious according to custom for the ceremony. Lakṣumī smelt the affair, and was very much pained at heart not for the chance of losing the property which should, as a matter of justice, go to her, but for the wickedness of the deed and the meanness of the persons concerned in it. She however never said a word of it to anybody, but con- sumed herself with her grief.

One night she was in her room weeping. The affair of the will came to her mind and she said to herself sobbing "Ah, what a wicked world. My dear, my lord, you did very well in leaving it so early. Happy it was for you that you did not see much of the wickedness and misfortune in the short span of your existence here. And I would not, not on any account, wish for your return here. Not all my suffering, loneliness and helplessness should induce me to wish for that. Even if God Yama were to come and promise to restore you to me here as he restored Satyavan to Satyavati I would say, "No, not even so long as I live."" If you were so wise as to do me some good. If he should refuse that high boon I would say to him, "Promote him to higher and higher regions of bliss on my account as much on account of his innumerable virtues. If my suffering and penance here would avail him anything, I will undergo a thousand-fold more torture than I do now. All I wish is his happiness. The happiness of him who was sweeter to me than my own life, my own joy, my pride, my god of love;" ah! sweet Krishna. How I rejoiced to hear thy sweet name from anybody's lips; and how my heart leaped with joy and pride when I heard it uttered with praise and satisfaction everywhere. To look at you was bliss, to talk to you was heaven and to hear your talk— that sweet voice, that divine love which flowed from every little syllable you uttered—to hear you talk was more than heaven. It would seem to me that the dust of earth which felt your soft tread in the dust, mounted to heaven and became stars. It would seem to me that the very air you breathed around was sacred and to repose on your mountain-like bosom! Ayo Parvati is not more happy in the Kaivas. How well you deserved the name Krishna. Yes you were my Krishna and I was your Rukmani, Satyabhama and the gopis all put together. Vain words? I am a hypocrite. I speak hollow words. Knowing that you were on your death bed, should I not have died before you did? There was one opportunity for doing justice to my love to you and I have lost it, lost it for ever. At least I might have kept on the funeral pyre which was burning your body, that temple of my love, that which sheltered you, mighty soul and whose beauty I enjoyed for many a day, that body bare to ashes just in my presence. Fool not to have died. A hypocritical watch still living—to see what—all this wickedness in the world? O father why do you not permit me to die. O cruel father!" Just as she was saying these last words cruel father, she heard a gentle knock at the door and on opening it, she found—her own father. Vasudeva Sastry saw her bathed in tears and at once tears rushed forth in his eyes also. He was not able to restrain them. Then controlling himself by degrees he comforted her also with gentle words which he only knew how to speak. At last she said "O father, why do you not permit me to die." His replied, "Child, be not hasty, God has sent you into this world and He knows when to take you out of it. Child, you are not fit enough for death." "Father, you always speak wisdom. Where is the like of you in all the three worlds? But it is we that suffer most," Lakshmi said sobbing. He said, "Don't grieve, my child, grief is selfish. There is neither suffering nor grief where there is no selfishness. Joy and sorrow are only in our minds." "Father," asked Lakshmi. "If I am not fit to die, then who else is?" Sastri replied "Lakshmi, my dear child, he alone is fit to die who is dead even in life, who is above grief and selfishness. Believe me, my child, you are born for very great things, and in a short time the world will understand you."

In reply Lakshmi remarked what a wicked world it was and related to him in detail the conspiracy that was going on in the house against her. He said, "Fear not my child, whatever happens, happens for our good. We shall neither want anything that does not come to us nor reject anything that comes to us. Let things take their own course, for they happen under the direction of God. Besides, what if they enjoy the estates or we, it is all the same to us who are not selfish. Their enjoying is as good as our enjoying. Then why grieve?" Lakshmi murmured, "Father, you are too generous. The world is a wicked world." "My child," said he, "Believe me, there will come a time when you yourself will say that the world is not bad, but it is God. It is all a difference of standpoints; you will know it all in due time." Then he related to her what happened at Madura and she expressed great sympathy for Rukmani and wept a little on her behalf. Then he told her of the commission with which he had been entrusted and took leave of her after a few hours stay there, bidding her take heart, and remember him when she was tempted to put an end to her life. Ho touchingly added "Live at least for me, do not desert your poor father and make me helpless." And he left Dinugul in the very next train that went northward.

It was noon time at Trichinopoly and the sun was exceedingly hot when a young man was climbing up the rock and going with great eagerness towards the Temple of Ganesh at its summit. The bare steep rock on which he walked scorched his feet like fire, and he appeared greatly fatigued owing perhaps to want of sleep during the previous night, but still he pushed on. There was an expression of eagerness and hope in his face, and all his worst was catered for, as he researched through the Tamil, particularly from Táýumáñávar, expressive of the glory of the Guru, perhaps to forget the toil of the ascent but more probably to keep up his religious fervour. He sang My Lord is the Lord of the universe My Guru is the Guru of the universe and pushed on until at last he reached the summit and entered the temple. He went in but did not even see the Image of the god; the object of his search seemed to be something else, which evidently he did not find there. Than he ran about in all directions shouting forth, "My Lord, my Gurunath," and soon but only the echoes gave a reply. He shouted louder and often when a surly voice replied, "What fool is this that shouts in this fashion, my lord, my lord. Is he mad?"

The Loss of the Soul.

The following is extracted from a "communication" called "The losing and the finding of the Soul": by Julia in the Borderland for July.

The worst evil of the present day is not its love of money, nor its selfishness. No, but its loss of the Soul. You forget that the Soul is the thing, and that all that concerns the body, except so far as it affects the Soul, is of no importance. But what you have to realise is, that men and women in this generation have lost the Soul. And this is a terrible truth. It is not what we used to think of losing the Soul in hell, after laying aside the body. It is a thing not of the future only, but of the present. Your Soul is lost now, and you have to find it. When I say lost, I mean it. You have lost it as you might lose a person in a crowd. It is severed from you, you are immersed in matter and you have lost your Soul. And the first, the most pressing of all things is to find your Soul. For until you find it you are little better than an active automaton, whose feverish movements have no real significance, no lasting value. The loss of the Soul, that is the Malady of the Day; and to find the Soul is the Way of Salvation. The finding of the Soul is the first thing and the most important thing. You will never find it unless you give yourself time to think, time to pray, time to realise that you have a Soul. You remember past time, and you remember when you must catch trains. But when do you remember that you must catch your Soul? No, no! all is rush, and jump and whirl, and your Soul gets lost, crowded out of your life. You have so many engagements that you have no time to live the Soul-life. That is what you have to learn. No doubt your work is important, and duty must be done. But what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own Soul?

And if you would find your Soul you must give time to the search.

You say you have no time. But you have time to make money, to amuse yourself, to make love, to do anything that you really want to do. But your Soul, that is a thing you do not care about. And so you have no time for your Soul.

You are getting less and less spiritual. The old ordinances, the services, the prayers, the meditations, the retreat, those gave you time. But one by one they all go—these cases where you could rest and meet your Soul. And you have materialised yourself even with the fretful struggle against materialism. For what is more important than struggling to stem evil, is to save your Soul, to possess your Soul, to hold it and not let it go.

What seems to me quite clear, is that the indifference to the Soul is caused by not understanding that the Soul is the Real Self, the only part of you which lasts, the Divine in you, which you are sacrificing to the things of the day.

It is through the Soul you obtain inspiration. The Soul links you with the Universe of God, with the Soul of the World. And when you lose touch with your Soul you become a mere prisoner in the dungeon of matter, through which you peer a little way by the windows of the senses.

If you will but find your Soul and develop its Divine potency there is opened before you a new Heaven and a new Earth, in which Absence is not for Death, and where the whole Universe of Love is yours.

"All that you have read of about the power of Spirit over Matter is nothing to the reality. You are as caterpillars, to what you might be. But the doorway into the Infinite is the Soul, and the Soul is lost when you have no time to think; no time to pray; no time to live. Therefore you must before all else make time. I speak the most sober and literal truth, when I say that if you did but possess your Soul and exercise its powers, Death or separation in this world would cease to exist for you, and the miseries which haunt the human race would disappear."