INDEX TO VOLUME II.

Contributions:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Abode of God—G. S. K.</td>
<td>38</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ahankara—G. S. K.</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Basis for Psychic or Spiritual Research—J. J. G.</td>
<td>83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Bench—A Sanyasi</td>
<td>21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bhakti—V. R. Goray</td>
<td>119</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Farewell</td>
<td>135</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fate Inevitable—R. S. Mukherji</td>
<td>138</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Glory of Love—S. Venkataramaiya</td>
<td>115</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Heroism of a Missionary’s Life—Sir E. Swamukander</td>
<td>41</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Toward and Beyond—J. J.</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kumaon—A Traveller in the Himalayas</td>
<td>39, 45</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leaves from the Gospel of the Lord Sri Rama-krishna—M.</td>
<td>100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Our Late Editor—G. S. K.</td>
<td>133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Our Religious Differences—R. A. K.</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panchism and Vedanta—J. J. G.</td>
<td>54</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Real Faith—L. N. J.</td>
<td>91</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saved and Lost—J. J. G.</td>
<td>52</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Science, Religion, Truth—Sir E. Swamukander</td>
<td>110</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Some Reasons for the Superiority of Vedanta over other systems—Kumaon Mal, B. A.</td>
<td>51</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Upanishad, A Story—H.</td>
<td>77</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Voice of Gentle Stillness—Yogananda</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Who is the Real Chandica?—L. N. J.</td>
<td>127</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Correspondence:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Person</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>G. B. Laghate</td>
<td>96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HariCharan Das Dutt</td>
<td>110</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Editorials:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Faith</td>
<td>30</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Freedom of Initiation</td>
<td>43</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Glory of Sati</td>
<td>77</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A Great Superstition</td>
<td>123</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Is the World Real or False?</td>
<td>75, 87</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Karma and Freedom</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Karma-Yoga</td>
<td>17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man, his Finiteness and his Greatness</td>
<td>136</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vedanta and the Emperor of Emperors</td>
<td>44</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The War</td>
<td>21</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Elements of Vedanta:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Chapter VI, The self in us</td>
<td>11</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Extracts:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Freedom of the Soul—Swami Vivekananda</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Influence of the Spiritual Thoughts of India in England—Miss Margaret Noble</td>
<td>127</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Is Vedantaism Pessimistic? Swami Vivekananda</td>
<td>28</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rabindranath Tagore—Charles Johnston</td>
<td>132</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lord Buddha—Swami Vivekananda</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Lost of the Soul—Borderland    | 48    |
| On Mann—Henry David            | 46    |
| Our Duty—The present Sri Sankaracharya | 117  |
| The Philosophy of the Atman and the Soul—Swami Vivekananda | 17   |
| Privilege—Swami Vivekananda    | 19    |
| Reincarnation—David Bank Sichte | 87   |
| Self and the Eternal—Charles Johnston | 132  |
| Sankara, Tencher of India—do   | 52    |
| Steps to Realization—Miss S. E. Walshe | 8    |
| The Sympathy of Religions—Swami Vivekananda | 58   |
| Take up the Sword              | 109   |
| A Truly Holy Life—Journal of the Mahabohi Society—18     | 141   |
| Vedanta—Swami Vivekananda      | 61    |
| Yajñavalkya and Maitreyi—do    | 143   |

Imitation of Vyasa:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Meditations of a Mauni or Manana Mala</td>
<td>19, 73, 85</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miscellaneous:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>End of Desire—Nobody-knows-who</td>
<td>91</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Extent of my Dominion—do</td>
<td>133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Glory of Mental Worship—A Recluse</td>
<td>34</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Goodness is Happiness</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>How Ramdass saw God</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life of Saint Vajirala—A Recluse</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life of Tatwariya Swami—do</td>
<td>142</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Missing Tenth—A Recluse</td>
<td>57</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Monism, qualified and pure—Nobody-knows-who</td>
<td>53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>An Old Man and Sri Krishna</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Radha and Krishna or the Confessions of an Honest God</td>
<td>14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Secret of Death, A Story</td>
<td>9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Time how for Real</td>
<td>9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wilderness of Life—Nobody-knows-who</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Reflections in the Vedanta:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>The World an Illusion</td>
<td>113</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Seekers after God:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>A. Sri Akkandar</td>
<td>28, 41, 55</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>B. Jayadeva Swami</td>
<td>79, 90</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Thoughts on the Bhagavad Gita:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Translations:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maitreyi Upanishad</td>
<td>17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Krishna Kamarupitam</td>
<td>38</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>True Greatness or Vasudeva Sastri, A Novel by T. C. Natarajan</td>
<td>22, 35, 47, 50, 55, 117, 130</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Editor: Sri B.K. Rajam Aiyar (Editor from June'96 to May'98) and Swami Swarupananda (from June 1898)
Unprecedented Hindu Watches for Rough Wear and Presentation.

We have been supplying many States and Departments of India for a number of years with watches, giving them the various advantages of this Country satisfied. Our watches are made of the best materials. It is impossible to make known the peculiarities of Hindu Watches by any Catalogues, or Portraits, or drawings, etc. etc., as only those who have actually seen them can fully appreciate them. We have a grand collection of any order, including the Watch Trade which has been a constant source of unprecedented success in all the world.

Hindu "Universal" WATC:hes — Lever, Calendar, Moon, Indian, Persian, and Bikaner in the centre. Black, pump, and cream color only. Guaranteed 3 years.

Hindu "Prize" WATC:hes — For those who want the highest qualities, in Brussels, France. And have a grand collection of any other order.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FREE ON APPLICATION.
G. B. NAIK & CO.,
RETAIL, WHOLESALE DEALERS AND MANUFACTURERS, BYCULLA, BOMBAY & POONA.

THE AWAKENED INDIA.

JULY 1897

BY KAILASEVANTE.

H. H. Mahanaga Sree Sattwa Catheramgat, G. S. S., Kolliapur.
PATRONIZED BY
H. H. Maharaja Krishnamgat, Mysore, Mysore.

Most of the Princes and Chiefs of India.

BOOKS ON HINDU RELIGION!!!

Hindu System of Moral Science or few words of Sattwa. Raja and Tamo Guna, by Babu Kishori Lal Sararka, m.t.b. Cloth. Price Rs. 1-4-0.

Raja Yoga Philosophy. Lectures delivered in New York. Winter of 1895-96, by the Swami Vivekananda on Raja Yoga or conquering the inner nature, also Patanjali's Yoga Aphorisms, with commentaries. Crossed 8 vo. (Third Edition). Price Rs. 2-0-0 (Sending most rapidly.) We have also a large stock of Swami Vivekananda series published by S. C. Mitra, Calcutta and others.

The Upanishads. Translated by F. Max Muller, Part I and II, each. Rs. 8-4-0.

The Sacred Laws of the Aryan as taught in the Schools of Persia, Egypt, and Bactria. Translated by Profs. George Biddle, Part I. Rs. 8-4-0.

The Teaching of the Vedas. Cloth. Rs. 4-8-0.

The Bhagavad Gità, with the Samantavidya, and the Amogha, translated by Krishnaram Tripathi Deb. Rs. 8-8-0.

Apply to—
T. S. SUBRAMANIA & Co.,
Polgat, Madras.

Swami Vivekananda Series.

PART I.

(Containing of (1) His Lectures in the Parliament of Religions, Chicago, America. (2) His Lectures at Hartford and at Brooklyn, America. (3) Another Version of his Lecture at Brooklyn. (4) The Soul Immortal. (5) An article on Reincarnation. (6) His Lecture on the Ideal of a Universal Religion. (7) The address of the Maharajah of Khetri and Swami's Reply to it. (9) Reply to the address of the Hindus of Madras. (10) The Song of the Sanyasi.)

Price 1 Rupee with a portrait and Postage 1 anna.

Life of Sri Ramakrishna Deva. Price 1 anna.

A. Swami Vivekananda in England 1895.
B. Swami Vivekananda in England 1896.
C. Swami Vivekananda in India 1897 (Some parts).
D. Karuna Yoga (Madras Edition).
E. Swami Vivekananda at Ceylon.

A. B, C, D, E, &c. Price 1 anna. Postage 1 anna each.

Swami's Lectures in the Parliament of Religions containing 180 pages. Price 3 as. Cloth bound 12 as. Postage 1 anna. Published by S. C. MITRA.

No. 2, Aryan Chint Dutt's Lane, Benoist Street, CALCUTTA.

THE DAWN.

A Monthly Magazine devoted to Religion, Philosophy, and Education, published for the benefit of the Bhashab Chotopanish of Bhawanipur, an institution whose primary object is the training up of scholars in Hindu life and discipline. Annual subscription: strictly in advance. India and Ceylon Rs. 1. Foreign 22. Office 44 Landsdowne Road, Bhawanapur, Calcutta.

THE SCORPION.

A pamphlet containing English, Hindu and Persian verses, by V. S. Balsemada Mudalir, D.M., M.R.A.S., &c. favorably reviewed by both the medical and lay journals and papers. Price 4 annas only. Apply to Medical Officer, Channagiri, Shinga District, Mysore Province.

A very useful pamphlet for every household.

Excellent Photographs of the Present day Religious Revivalists.

Worth having!! Worth preserving!! Worth remembering!!

The following are available at 1 Re. each, cabinet size.

1. The present Jagadguru of Sringeri—A worthy occupant of the august throne of that Mutt. 2. Swami Vivekananda, in his Sanyasi dress; or in his American dress. 3. Paramahansa Ramakrishna, in Sambalpuri Tamils. 4. Sree Sattwa Catheramgat, in Brussels, France. 5. Anu Annie Beasant, C. Colonel H. S. O'Grady. 7. A large size group photo of Swami Vivekananda and four of his brother disciples each Rs. 2 each.

Application to—
T. G. APPAYI MOHALIAR,
No. 31, Trinvalnara Moodi Street,
COLOMBO, MADRAS.

Swami Vivekananda's
Six Madras Lectures

with his excellent Phototype—Full Text—Now ready

Price 8 annas. Postage Extra.

Apply to—
Messrs. Thompson & Co.,
Publishers and Booksellers,
Popham's Broadway, Madras.
Cheap!  Cheap!!  Cheap!!!

THE IMPERIAL
NAME STAMP AND INK

A PEN AND PENCIL SELF-INKING CASE, FOR ONE RUPEE ONLY.

It saves you from Printing No. 1 Heads, Letter Heads, Visiting Cards, Envelops.
Rubber Stamps can be had in all languages—Sirah—Garters, and Fancy Stamps.
Our Stamps include Box, Patina and Ink (Fancy Colour).
Apply for our Catalogue of Rubber Stamps.
Messes. T. S. SUBRAMANIA & Co.,
Palghat.

A Rare Opportunity!
Don't Miss This!

A Sanskrit English Dictionary, being a practical handbook with Transliteration, Accretion and Etymological Analysis throughout—by A. A. Macdowell, m.a., P. H. B. Cloth 4to. Published Price Rs. 5.

We are now selling this book at the low price of Rs. 10 only. An early order is requested, as the number to be dispensed is limited.

Apply sharp to Messes. T. S. SUBRAMANIA & Co.,
Booksellers, &c., Palghat, India.

Novelty in the Ayurvedic Medicines!!!

Ashwaayudharihshita or Tonic Balm of Ashwaayudharihshita. It cures weakness, caused by prolonged ill health, poverty of blood, nervous debility, vertigo, short sightedness, partial deafness, and weakness of females after delivery. Its tonic properties assist the healthy functions of the digestive organs, fortify and strengthen the constitution, giving tone and vigour to the system. It is one of the best remedies in cases of nervous prostration and debilitated constitut
Price one phial Re. 1-0-0.

Panchatatakasaya or Anti-Malaria mixture. Fever, acute or chronic, enlargement of the liver and spleen, Anamixia, consumption, malignant fever, remittent and intermittent fever, in fact fever of all sorts, radically cured by using this mixture for a week or so.
It is scientifically prepared with many valuable Ayurvedic ingredients. Its effects have been testified to be thousands of men after actual experience. Price for one phial with one box of pills Re. 1-0-0.

Hair Dye. Is purely a vegetable preparation free from lead or any deleterious matter. It is tonic and stimulatig to the scalp and prevents the hair from falling out. Even old men will look young.
It turns grey hair into jet black and colour the head.
Price for 2 phials Rs. 3-0-0.

Celebrated Scented Tooth Powder. As 8 per box. Cures radically all sorts of pains, ulcerations and bad smell.

Kesh Ranjan Oil—Or the best secret scented oil for varicose headache caused by nervous debility, and growth of hairs.
Price Re. 1-0-0.

Netrabindu. Or Eye Drops. Price per phial Re. 1-0-0.

All sorts of Ayurvedic Medicines, Oils, Gallas, &c., &c., can be had at moderate prices. Illustrated Catalogue free on application to Messes. T. S. SUBRAMANIA & Co.,
Palghat, Madras Presidency.

Agents for Kaviraj Nagendra Nath Sen, Calcutta.

(First Medical Diploma Holder, author of "Kaviraj" and "Dakriki Sikan," &c., Member of the Chemical Society—Prices, Medical Society, Calcutta, &c., &c.)

All letters, Telegrams, Money Orders, Cheques, Homeida, &c., should be addressed to Messes. T. S. SUBRAMANIA & Co.,
Agents for Kaviraj Nagendra Nath Sen,
Palghat, Madras Presidency.

READ THIS!
Worth Buying!
Worth Reading!!
Worth Presenting!!

SELF-HELP;
With Illustrations of Conduct and Perseverance
By Dr. S. SMILES.
Author of Lives of the Engineers.

Containing 15 Long Chapters, viz:—1. Self-Help, National and Individual.—2. Leaders of Industry, Inventors and Producers.—3. Three great Potters.—4. Application and Perseverance.—5. Helps and Opportunities, Scientific Facts.—6.
Workers in Art.—7. Industry and the Peasant.—8. Energy and 11. Self-Culture, Facilities and Difficulties.—12. Example,

Price Rs. 1-0-0
Postage Free

SOLD BY
Messes. T. S. SUBRAMANIA & Co.,
Publishers & Booksellers, Palghat,
Madras Presidency.
31. The Hymns of the Samaveda, as above, in one volume.
32. The Hymns of the Atharvaveda, as above, into two volumes.

33. Griffith's Metrical Translation of Valmikis Rama-yana, complete in one volume, cloth bound, Rs. 3-4.
34. A Treatise on the Yoga Philosophy, by N. C. Paul.

35. The Bhagavad Gita, Translated into English, with a learned Preface and valuable footnotes, by Bala Pranavadis Misra. Price, leather cover, Rs. 2; cloth, Rs. 1; paper, As. 8.

36. Bhrama, Iswara and Maya, by Bala Pranavadis Misra.

37. Hindi System of Worship, by P. A. S.

38. Vedantic Conception of Brahman, by P. A. S.

39. The Bhagavad Gita, Translated into English, by Mrs. Annie Besant. Leather cover, Rs. 4; paper, As. 8.

(To be continued on the reverse.)

The Secretary,

Saraswati Bhatia's Publishing Society,

Bendore City,

The Great Chamundi's Specific for Cholera.

It is a wonderful specific. It was discovered by a great seer, whose heart was filled with pity for suffering humanity at the great Arabian Cholera Epidemics. It is prepared from a non-poisonous plant originally derived from Arabia, but now found in different parts of the chilly tracts of Mysoor. It has been tried with wonderful success in some very bad cases of Cholera, and it is perfectly safe in the hands of all one however skillful. It contains no opium or morphine or any other narcotic drug, but the bane of the orthodox treatment of Cholera and the chief ingredient in all Chlorodynes. The use of opium in this disease is as irrational as it is dangerous. It is supposed to check the evacuations, which however are only artificial efforts to get rid of the poisonous germs and their products. Such medicines only deaden the sensibility of the intestines and stop their natural movements (peristaltic action as they are technically called) and lead to the blotting of the stomach so frequently seen before death in cases where opium and other narcotics have been administered. Besides, according to the old treatment, different medicines are required at different stages of the disease and great caution has to be used in their administration. Whereas in the case of this new specific it is the one remedy to be used in all stages and no other need be thought of. It acts more effectually in cases not dragged previous and in those cases where Brandy and other alcoholic liquors have not been previously administered. If the directions given are faithfully carried out, there is no reason why any case of cholera should not recover.

Every household should possess a bottle of this specific.

Please give it a trial and satisfy Yourself.

Directions. Accompany Each Bottle.

The Chamundi's Specific for Cholera can be had of THE MANAGER, AWAKENED INDIA, Mysoor, Mysore: or of Messrs. T. G. PILLAI & BROS., Chemists and Druggists, Mysoor, Mysore.

Price per 1 oz. Phial Rs. 1-40; 4 oz. Rs. 5-80; 1 lb. Rs. 1-20.

Half an ounce of the Specific is more than enough for two doses.

THE Prabuddha Bhârata OR AWAKENED INDIA.

"He who knows the Supreme attains the highest."—Tait. Upa. II. 1. 1.

Vol. II. No. 1. MADRAS, JULY 1897. PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

Karma Yoga.

To remove our ignorance, to open our eyes now blindfolded by Maya, and lead us back to the fountain of bliss, our own Inner Self, is the purpose of all the scriptures of the world, and has been the one endeavour of the great sages who, by their lives and teachings, blessed our sad planet. The lives of these latter were all voluntarily dedicated to the service of suffering humanity, and all of them have uniformly striven to draw us nearer and nearer the centre of our being. With this glorious and selfless end in view, they have clearly marked out for us the road to salvation, and also indicated the milestones in that road, the successive stages through which the spirit progresses towards its goal. Especially in our country, the idea of there being a something beyond this world of change and suffering, this penal colony as it has been styled, is presented to us at every turn in life, in marriage, in our daily observances, in funeral ceremonies. Studdhas, nay, even eating for the satisfaction of our hunger, the Varahapanishad says, should be looked upon as a sort of worship of the Atman within.

Indeed, in few countries has the evolution of the soul been traced from its earliest starting point to its final destination so fully as in ours; and nowhere else has the path for liberation been indicated with so much clearness. That path has in our books been divided into four sections, the first of which is called Karma Yoga, the second Bhakti Yoga, the third Raja Yoga and the fourth and last Gnana Yoga. Yoga means the path or method whereby the soul attains its union with the Supreme. These four Yogas are sometimes also called four feet. Of these, Karma Yoga is the first from the bottom; it is the first rung in the ladder to Heaven, for it is farthest from the ideal, viz., the cessation of all sense of duality and consequently of all action. Karma Yoga, rightly practised, leads to Bhakti Yoga; which in its turn leads on to Raja Yoga; which last gradually brings us Gnana or wisdom, the realisation of one-ness with the Brahman who alone really exists. A sense of difference is the very life of action, for all action implies a doer, a deed different from the doer and an object or instrument of action different from both; but says the Sruti, "Those who believe in duality are not masters of their own selves and go to perishable regions, while he who realises the reverse becomes his own king." There is duality in Bhakti Yoga also, i.e., in the earlier stages, but bhakta lessens the restlessness of the mind and proportionately destroys the illusion of manifoldness, for the bhakta sees only the Lord of his love in all the universe. Bhakti Yoga is thus higher than Karma Yoga while Raja Yoga is superior to the former, for it is a conscious effort at union with the Deity which, during its fulfilment, forms what is called Gnana Yoga. The course of evolution thus begins with Karma Yoga and ends with Gnana Yoga. That this is so, not merely stands to reason, but is also the opinion of the scriptures, as may be seen from verses 8 to 11 of Chap. XII of the Bhagavat Gita.

It is not however for a moment asserted that Karma ceases as soon as Bhakti begins, and Bhakti as soon as Yoga, and that Karma, Bhakti and Yoga are all absent in the gnani. For, as we have already seen that the gnani is the best Karma yogin and that thoroughly motiveless action is possible only in the case of the gnani. So in the case of Bhakti also, the highest or Para Bhakti is, as we have seen in a previous number, very nearly equal to wisdom, so much so that Shankara has defined Bhakti in his Vivekachintamani as meditation on one's own Self. Again the words Yogi and Gnani are indiscriminately used for each other in several passages of the Upanishads and the Gita, Karma, Bhakti, Yoga and Gnana do not therefore mutually exclude each other. On the other hand, every Yoga is a fulfilment of the preceding one. Bhakti is the fulfilment of Karma, Yoga of Bhakti and Karma, and Gnana of all the preceding three. What is meant then by saying that these four Yogas are distinct divisions of the trunk road to release is only that Karma or action is predominant in Karma Yoga, Bhakti in Bhakti Yoga and so on. Every Yoga is named after the element which is predominant in it.

The question may be asked, why these four Yogas? The reply is, because the Vedanta philosophy is universal and covers the whole ground of human evolution. One method will not suit all men. Some men have mystic tendencies; they must realise God by means of inner searching, by examining into the nature of mind in all its workings. Others are of emotional tendencies and must adopt devotional methods; they must concretise their ideals in a Personal God. Others are philosophers pure and simple; to them the idea of dependence upon a Being outside of themselves does not appeal, and reason and sheer force of will alone can help them. Lastly, there are men who require activity in order to make progress and for them is the Science of Karma Yoga.

Although the germs of Karma Yoga are contained in the Upanishads, and although it is a natural inference from the lessons which they inculcate, yet we owe it to the genius of Sri Krishna that action which is a necessity of our nature has been shown, if performed properly, to go a great way towards liberating us from the thralldom of Maya. The Bhagavad Gita is the book on Karma Yoga, and no where else do we find the path of action indicated with so much of clearness and beauty. Indeed it was Sri Krishna who elevated action to the dignity of a Yoga.

The Karma Yoga of the Gita should not however be confounded with what is known as Karma Marga, as opposed to Gnana Marga, which is sometimes styled Dhama Marga, the smoke-filled path, by which performers of sacrifices and other rituals enjoined in the Karma Khandha of the Vedas, the Purva Mimamsa and the Smritis based upon them, attain to celestial regions such as the world of gods, the world of the forefathers, and so on. The Karma Yoga of the Vedanta means the path whereby one progresses towards liberation by the proper performance of the work that comes to hand. Karma in the latter has a much broader sense than in the former. In its broadest sense in which it is often used in the Gita, it applies to any kind of activity either of body, mind or the senses, as Sankara says in his commentary on verse IV, 18. More specifically, it means duty or work in which one engages.

In the term Karma Marga, on the other hand, it denotes Vedic sacrifices and rituals by which one secures the right for entering higher and higher worlds of enjoyment after death. The Karma Yoga of the Gita brings about purity of mind, and through it wisdom; Karma of the Karmakandha is Kânya, i.e., for the gratification of desires, while Karma in the Gita is Nishkânya, i.e., free from desire and motiveless.

'O Arjuna,' says Sri Krishna, 'Kânya Karma is much lower than Nishkânya Karma; therefore take thou to the latter which leads to wisdom. Those who desire for fruit feel miserable' (Gita II. 49). 'Action, as we have already seen, can never give us liberation. Perfection,' says Swami Vivekananda, 'can never be attained by work. We may work through all eternity, but there will be no way out of this maze; you may work on and on and on, but there will be no end.' Wise men,' says the Naradaparivrajkapishad, 'escape death by knowing the Brahman. There is no other road to salvation.' That even Vedic sacrifices are no better than other Karma in procuring us our salvation is clearly expressed in the following verses of the Mundaka Upanishad :-

'Perishable and transient are verily the eighteen supporters of the sacrifice on whom, it is said, the inferior work (Ksäma Karma) depends. The tools who consider this work as the highest, undergo again even decay and death. In the midst of ignorance, fools fancying themselves wise and learned, go round and round, oppressed by misery, as blind people led by the blind. Living in various ways in ignorance, youths imagine, we have obtained our end. Because the performers of work from attachment are not wise, therefore suffering unhappiness, they lose heaven, when the fruit of their works has become nought. Fancying oblations and pious gifts to be the highest, fools do not know anything good. Having enjoyed the fruit of their works on the high place of heaven which they gained by their actions, they enter again this world or one that is lower (1, II, 7-11). Then the Upanishad proceeds to say, 'Let the Brahman, after he has examined the worlds gained by works, renounce the world, reflecting that there is nothing that is not created, all being the effect of work. For the purpose of knowing that (which is not created), he approaches, sacred wool in his hand, a teacher who knows the Vedas and who is solely devoted to Brahman.

To go to the teacher, and that with the senses subdued and mind at rest, as required in the next verse of the above Upanishad, is however not possible for most men. Many there are who, though aware of the insufficiency of work, are yet too active and rajasic in their character and are by the principles in their nature, bound 'to be up and doing,' like Arjuna to whom Krishna said, 'O son of Kunti, thou that art bound by past Karma and the duties of thy order art going to fight even against thy will, as one compelled to do so' (Gita XVIII, 60). It is for such men that Karma Yoga is meant. It will raise them a step nearer the ideal which they are unable to approach by any other means,
‘In this world,’ says Sri Krishna, ‘there is nothing so purifying as Gnana; but the Karma Yogi realizes for himself that Atma Gnana in course of time’ (Gītā, IV, 38). Karma Yoga then stands midway between Karma Marga and Gnana Marga. Karma of the Karma Marga not only does not liberate man but binds him more and more, for it creates newer and newer desires while the practice of Karma Yoga kills out desire, and secures emancipation from the thralldom of Māyā. Says the Gītā: ‘The Karma Yogi attains the release which comes of wisdom by leaving off desire for the fruits of action, while he who being prompted by desire is attached to them becomes bound.’ (V. 13).

Two elements are indispensably required in Karma Yoga—non-attachment or indifference to the fruits of action, and dedication of the work to God. Krishna says to Arjuna, ‘O Dhananjaya, do thy duty with thy mind fixed upon the Lord, leaving off all attachment and without caring for the fruits of thy action. Equanimity of mind whatever may be the consequences of one’s action—this is what is called (Karma) Yoga’ (Gītā, II, 48). Both these elements are necessary and great is the virtue of action performed with utter indifference to results and dedicated to the Lord. ‘That which is done as Nishkamya Karma will never be vain: there can be no harm caused by it. Even a small portion of the virtue of such Karma will enable man to overcome much fear’ (Gītā, II, 49). Karma Yoga then though the first of the four Yogas is productive of wonderful results. Indeed, when two such elements combine as non-attachment and a feeling of worship, what doubt is there that the result will be glorious?

In the first place, non-attachment brings about freedom from grief and fear; attachment is the first child of Māyā and nearly all the misery of the world is directly due to it. To be non-attached is to be fearless. Bhartrihari says, ‘Everything in the world is fraught with fear. It is non-attachment that makes one fearless.’ A man who works unattached is above grief and fear. Secondly, as the Karma Yogi dedicates his work to God, he approaches nearer and nearer the centre of his being his inner Self. The God-idea gradually grows upon him, until he realises that he, as a member of the phenomenal world, is simply an instrument in the hands of God, that it is God that speaks through the universe. A steady practice of Karma Yoga will enable a man to say with Thayumanavar, ‘Everything is thy property, O God; everything is Thy doing; Thou pervadest the whole universe’; and he will realise the meaning of the celebrated verses of the Brihadāranyaka Upanishad, which describe the glory of the Antaryamin, the ‘Inner Ruler, immortal,’ such as, ‘He who dwelling in the mind is within the mind, whom the mind does not know, whose body is the mind, who from within rules the mind, is thy Soul, the Inner Ruler, immortal.’ (Br. Upan., III, vii). It has been well said ‘Prudent men abandoning the fruits of action attain wisdom and obtaining release from the bonds of life reach that state which is free from grief.’ (Gītā, II, 51).

It is in the nature of all Karma to destroy Tamas, laziness and the like, but Nishkamya Karma gradually kills out rajoja also, for, as non-attachment and worship form its elements, it is the best antidote for pride and selfishness. True Satvic humility characterizes such Karma, and it is only this Karma which can be properly said to involve self-sacrifice. For, however glorious may be the work which one might perform, if he does it with a sense of self-consciousness and pride or with motives such as fame, there is no sacrifice of self but propagation, and it is much inferior to ordinary Nishkāmya Karma, not to speak of such a memorable act as that of Emperor Civi who cut off flesh from his own thigh to save a pigeon, or that of the rishi Dadhichi who gladly gave his backbone to Indra who asked for it. ‘Ordinary Karma is much lower,’ says Krishna, ‘than that which is Nishkāmya‘ (II, 49).

The great Bhishmacharya of the Mahabharata was a wonderful example of a Karma-Yogi. The story of his resigning his throne and taking the Brahmacarya vow for the sake of his father and step-brothers is too well-known to need mention here. Before the great war, he took hold of every possible opportunity to advise Duryodhana to make peace with the Pandavas. He told him, times without number, that his cause was unjust and would not succeed, and that not even gods could resist the Pandavas in battle. That obstinate and evil-minded prince heeded not his words however, and often charged him with being partial to the Pandavas. The battle of Kurukshetra was the result, and though Bhishma had, till the very eve of battle, pleaded for the Pandavas, yet when duty called him, he fought better than all the rest together, causing immense havoc among the Pandava army. Yet he had no enmity against the Pandavas or attachment to the Kauravas; fighting as he did was in his eyes a duty and being called upon to perform it, he did so as a true Karma Yogi without attachment and without caring for the results. Even his death was, as it were, due to his sense of duty. He died because the situation required it, because he thought he was bound to die. How gloriously brought about his own death will, though well known, bear repetition here. In a war council held in the Pandava camp Yudhishtira proposed to consult Bhishma himself as to how they may obtain victory over the Kauravas. Bhishma had told him ‘I will give thee counsel, but fight I shall never for thee, since I shall have to fight for Duryodhana’s sake.’ Dharmaputra’s proposal was approved, and accordingly Krishna and the Pandavas went to the grand old man and asked him, ‘Tell us, O grandsire, the means by which we may vanquish thee in battle, by which sovereignty may be ours; and, by which our army may not have to undergo such destruction as you an now causing’. The great Bhishma replied, ‘As long as I am alive, victory cannot be yours. Truly do I say this unto you. After however I am vanquished in fight, you may have victory in the title. If therefore you desire victory in the battle, smite me down without delay. I give you permission, ye sons of Pandu, strike me as you please. After I am slain at the rest will be slain. Therefore do as I bid.’ Then he frankly told them that he would be killed by Arjuna fighting against him placing Sikhandin in the front Really a remarkable incident this! Our poor world has not seen many such heroes as Bhishma who would lay down their lives purely out of a sense of duty. Because he had promised to give counsel to the Pandavas, he gladly told them, when they asked him, how he himself might be killed!

Though such ‘man-mountains’ are not met with in modern days, our ancient literature abounds in instances of hero’s self-sacrifice. For were not Rama, Lakshmana, Bharata, Janaka, Sita, Krishna, Buddha and others mighty Karma Yogi’s? One thing common to these heroes is spirituality. By spirituality is not here meant any adherence to doctrines, to narrow theological dogmas and beliefs, but a strong faith in something beyond this world of selfishness and hate, a contempt for earthly life and prosperity and an incapacity for meanness. The world was nothing in their eyes, and they lived wedded, as it were, to eternity. It is this spirituality which was the secret of their heroism. They were great Karma Yogi’s because they had strength of character and an unshakeable faith in the supreme—not like the little worms that we are, crawling on earth with no better ambition than to hoard up its dust and no better occupation than to steal, fight and kill. The sage of Chelsea is perfectly right when he says, ‘The question between man and man always is, will you kill me or shall I kill you?’ Mean and petty scrambling for the propiation of our false self as if there is nothing higher than that—this is our lot. But those great men of old moved in a world much higher than ours; they loved each other even when fighting and readily sacrificed themselves for the sake of duty. All this they did because they never lost sight of the ‘Star above the storm.’

Without this element of spirituality, Karma Yoga is impossible. ‘To work for work’s sake, without motives, is all very well in words, but when one begins to follow it in practice then the difficulty will be present. That is why in almost every verse of the Gita which speaks of Karma Yoga, both the elements—non-attachment and the sense of worship—are combined. Indeed, the first is almost impossible without the second, for the mind is unable to leave off desire unless it recognises the existence of something better than the things it desires. Absolute non-attachment is an impossible condition. The mind can leave hold of lower things only if it is sufficiently attracted by higher things. Service of man and worship of God should therefore go hand in hand until they become one and identical. It has been wisely observed, ‘Service on the physical plane is good; service on the mental or psychic plane is better; the altruistic effort involved in both requires the impulse of the higher worship as a good.’ The absence of this impulse robs the Karma Yoga of Buddhism not the Buddhism of modern days) of half its worth and makes it nearly impracticable. Besides, it is an immense advantage that we are, as in our system, reminded of God at every turn in the course of our evolution.

Not merely is Nishkāmya Karma of advantage to the individual, but even as work, it will be much better than that which is done with motives. That work is the best which contains in it the least quantity of personal equation. He is the best actor, for example, who, for the time being, identifies himself with the part he is playing. The greatest works of art were executed by men who forgot themselves in the work. He is the best musician who loses his little self while singing. All high work is impersonal and spiritual, being free from the considerations of self and the hankering after results.

Nishkāmya Karma is therefore the best Karma. It very much helps the individual’s growth and at the same time brings about the greatest results. But he who attempts to practise Karma Yoga because it is so beneficial, is not a Karma Yogi, for he works with motive. ‘Honesty is the best policy, but he who acts on that principle is not an honest man’ is the saying. In the same way, Nishkāmya Karma is the best Karma and brings about most marvellous results; but he who attempts to do such Karma because it is so, is not a Karma Yogi and cuts the ground under his own feet.

Lord Buddha.

(Some Observations on—by Swami Vivekananda.)

(In the course of a lecture delivered in Detroit, U. S. A., the Swami Vivekananda made the following reference to Lord Buddha—

In every religion we find one type of emancipation particularly developed. The type of working without motive is most highly developed in Buddhism.) Do not mistake Buddhism and Buddhism. In this country you are very apt to do so. Buddhism is one of our sects. It was founded by a great man called Gautama, who became disgusted at the eternal metaphysical discussions of his day, and the curious rituals. He spoke of the caste system. Some people say that we are born to a certain state, and therefore we are superior to others who are not thus born. He was also disgusted with the tremendous priestcraft. He preached a religion in which there was no motive power, and was perfectly agnostic about metaphysics or theories.) He was often asked, ‘Is there a God, sir?’ and handfasted, I do not know. I did not tell you that.” “Then what shall I do?” He would reply, “Do good and be good. There came live Brahmins, they were discussing among themselves, and they asked him to settle their discussion. One said, "Sir, my book says that God is such and such, and that this is the way to come to God." Another said, "That is wrong, for my book says such and such, and this is the way to come to God," and so on. He listened, to all of them calmly; and then asked them one by one, "Does any one of your books say that God becomes angry, that He ever injures any one, that He is impure?" "No, sir, they all teach that God is pure." Then, my friends, why do you not become pure and good first, and then you will know what God is." Of course I do not endorse all his philosophy. I want a good deal of metaphysics for myself. I entirely respect the men, and respect, but, because they differ, is that any reason why we should not see the beauty of the man? That is the only man who was bereft of all motive powers. (There were other great men,—Krishna, for instance, a great prophet—who all said they were the incarnations of God Himself, and you believe in me you will go to heaven, and what did this man (Buddha) say with his dying breath? "None can help you; help yourself; work out your own salvation." And he says about himself, that what is meant by Buddha (Buddha is a state just as with Jesus "Jesus the Christ") is this—Buddha is the name of infinite knowledge, infinite as the sky; I, Gautama, have reached that; so you will all reach a struggle for that. Bereft of all motive power, did not want to go to heaven, did not want money; he gave up money and his throne and everything, and went about beggaring his bread through the streets of India, preaching for the good of men and animals and—everything, with a heart as wide as the ocean. He was the only one who was ever ready to give up his life for animals, to stop a sacrifice. He once said to a king, "If the sacrifice of a lamb helps you to go to heaven, then sacrificing a man will help you better, so sacrifice me." The king was astonished, and yet this man was without any motive power. He stands as the perfection of the ascetic type, and the very height to which he attained shows that through the power of work we can also attain to the greatest height. But so many the path becomes easier if they believe in God. But he would not even have anything to do with God, with religion, or with metaphysics, showing that even the man who does not believe in anything—has no metaphysics, does not go to any church, sect, or temple, is an openly confessed materialist—can attain to the highest. We have no right to judge him. I wish I had one inch of part of Buddha's heart and work. He may or may not have believed in God; that does not matter to me. He reached the same state of perfection to which others will come by Bhakti—love of God, Yoga or Gnosis. Perfection does not come from belief or faith. Talk does not count for anything. Parrots can do that.

How Ramdas saw God.

There was in recent times a great Vaishnavite Bhakti by name Ramdas. He was very anxious to obtain a vision of God. It so happened that, while he was sitting one evening with a number of devotees in a grove, where he had made a feast that day to a large number of Brahmins, he heard the soft melodies of a Bhakti who was singing the praises of the Lord. He at once proceeded in the direction of the voice, and finding that it was no less a personage than the celebrated Kabirdas, who was no singing, at once fell at his feet. After the usual salutations and inquiries were over, Ramdas requested Kabir to initiate him into the mysteries of Yogas. Kabir gladly complied with the request and for some days he stayed in the grove as a guest of Ramdas.

Shortly after, Ramdas again approached Kabir and requested to be favoured with a vision of God. Kabir promised a daylight one and asked his disciple to arrange for a grand feast for Brahmins as a preparation for the appearance of the Lord. The feast was accordingly arranged, grand preparations were made on every side and the whole town of Badrachalam, where Ramdas lived, decorated for the reception of God. Numberless Brahmins had assembled and the dinner which in sumptuousness outdid even their expectations was ready awaiting the arrival of God. Twelve o'clock was the hour arranged for the vision, but one o'clock and two o'clock and even three o'clock passed away, but the Lord did not appear. Ramdas began to doubt the sincerity of Kabir and the Brahmins impatient, as a rule, of hunger, and now very angry with the Lord who stood between them and their dinner, complained in no murmurs.

While thus suspense was growing into disappointment, a wild buffalo, all dirty and covered over with mire, rushed into the grove and began to roll its nice person over the heap of food that had been stored up in tempting abundance. It upset the pots containing glue, milk, soup and other things and made a thorough hearth-garden of the whole dinner. All the food became spoiled and the angry Brahmins and the mortified Ramdas, seeing the mess which the dirty creature was making, surrounded it on all sides and beat it till the blood came, branded it on several parts of the body and then drove it away. All the feast being thus spoiled, fresh rice was brought and cooked and the Brahmins fed but, of course, in the grand style originally designed. For this disappointment they were very severe on poor Ramdas, cursed him, with all their heart and went home in no pleasant mood. Ramdas himself was filled, with shame at having been thus duped by a Kabir. In the meanwhile, the buffalo went to Kabir who seeing the scars on its body and the blood which was still oozing from its wounds was filled with grief and exclaming, 'O God, is this the treatment you received!' began to apply medicine to its wounds, but the buffalo said—it was God Himself who went to Ramdas in the form of a buffalo—"This is the treatment which Ramdas, to whom I went at your request, gave me. You need not grieve however, as it is nothing by the wounds with which my body was covered in the battle with Ravana" and took leave from him. In the evening, Ramdas came to Kabir with an angry face; but his anger gave way to grief when he learned how God had come and gone and with what sort of treatment. Sago Kabir then told Ramdas how everything in the universe was really God and how the Bhakta should recognize God not only in the temple but in everything one sees, for there is nothing outside the Lord. So says the Yajnavalkya Upanishad. "One should know that God is in everything and worship the horse, the Chandala, the cow, the ass and every other thing, falling on the ground before them like a tree."

The greatest characteristic of a truly great man or man, next to absolute selflessness is humility; and with humility we must couple simplicity, for the one is born of the other.—H. W. Tiele.

As one can ascend the top of a house by means of a ladder, or a bamboo, or a staircase, or a rope, so divers are the ways and means to approach God; and every religion in the world shows one of these ways.
Steps to Realization.

(By Miss E. Waldo.)

Every being is essentially divine, from the monotonous man. All are manifestations of the One Existence. Behind everything that we see, or know, or think, or even imagine is that one infinite ocean of Existence-Knowledge-Bliss, that alone makes possible the known universe. A tiny drop of that ocean, as it were, gets caught in the network of time, space and causation and forms this world of experience. We can all see the world around us, the world of endless variety, of countless change. No one dreams of denying that this world is a fact in our consciousness. Having then this world clearly before us, the problem arises, how explain the existence of this wonderful universe. In the West, man has set to work with infinite patience to seek the solution of this problem by examining the seen, the tangible and so endeavoring by careful study of them, to reach an understanding of their origin. Every branch of study has been most carefully, most laboriously pursued. The so-called sciences are a numerous family, and the discoveries made in each have been most wonderful. In all these diverse researches, in all the divergent conclusions reached, there has yet been a certain harmony. On one thing, every student is agreed. Underlying all that man can see, or know, is what is called law. This law is manifested in different ways, and man has not yet begun to grasp its working, he has only come to partly perceive its existence. The first great law, under which all the rest may be grouped is the law of causation, the law that every effect must have a cause. The human brain is utterly unable to form any concept of an effect that had no cause, or of a cause with no effect. This endless, and beginningless sequence conditions all man's thinking, and the great German philosopher Kant showed clearly that it was inherent in the very nature of man's thinking capacity. So nearly allied to this inevitable idea of causation as to practically form a trinity with it, come the ideas of space and time. As little as we can conceive an effect without a cause, just as little can we conceive any effect that occurs nowhere and at no time. As soon as the human mind tries to form such a concept, it finds out the impossibility of doing it, and any state of existence beyond this apparently impossible barrier seems to the human thinker an impossible dream. Yet we have the record of many great souls, in many different lands and of widely diverse creeds, who unhesitatingly have arrived at a state that transcended the hard and fast laws that govern the working of man's mind. Of course objection can be taken and the assertion made that these statements are not true. I once heard an eminent archeologist say that the fact that one fossil remains had been found by one man in any given locality, outweighed in value the testimony of a million people who might have walked there before him and not seen any such thing. He said the trained eye, and the disciplined mind and the learning of the student of archeology gave him such an immense advantage over the ordinary observer, that it was almost like comparing the faculties of a blind man with those of one of unimpaired power of vision, to expect the one to see what would most plainly appear to the other. If this can be so forcibly asserted of the realm of the seen, how much more must it be true of the realm of mind! The testimony from so many sources as one state above and beyond ordinary sense-perception, is at least worthy of consideration. In different countries and in different centuries, men who never even heard of each other, bear testimony to having reached that state. It has been called by many names, usually being regarded as union with the Divine, or God. The Hindus call it by a higher name, they call it Realization. By this they mean that it is not a vision of a God either without or within, who is separate from the soul having that vision, but that it is the awareness of the human soul that it is itself God, that there is but one Soul or Self and that all that appears as variety, is still that one Self seen through name and form, or in other words, through limitation. Having thus clearly apprehended what the term realization means, we can consider the question as to how it can be arrived at. To many this is a question of absorbing interest, while to a vastly larger number, it appears the most and most visionary of all inquiries. To the student of Vedanta it is of paramount importance, because realization is the end and aim of every effort, the one thing to be desired, and the whole Vedanta philosophy resolves itself into the effort to teach man how this goal can be attained. In giving some distinct and positive directions for procedure, Vedanta also tells us plainly that there are endless other ways of accomplishing the same result. As realization is a matter of individual experience, all that any one, however great, can do for us, is to point the way or give such clues to the path as will guide us in the search, but every human being has to tread the road, step by step, just as he has to breathe for himself, eat for himself, live and die for himself. The greatest power conceivable cannot give us the desired result. The wildest dream of science never imagines that a way can be devised for one human being to breathe for another. Neither can one soul realize for another. But the soul which has reached the goal itself can be of the greatest possible help to another who is still struggling towards it.

What then is the message of those great ones? Their message constitutes what we call the scriptures, or word of God. Not any special book, the bible, quora, veda or any other, is meant by these scriptures. All the teachings of all the great souls who have reached liberation, and then for a while renouncing the blessing, return in order to help others, are worthy to be called scriptures. The homage that is paid to these books of religion in all lands proves how instinctively the human mind has recognized their value and importance. No power of any sovereignty the world ever saw nor the world ever saw was great enough to take any ordinary book and raise it to the same level of veneration. Because man is naturally so constituted that he must strive to pierce beyond the seeming, and because he believes that those whose words these "sacred books" record had done so, he is forced to pay reverence to them. And history tells us this has ever been the case, and it will over be the case with the majority of mankind. These so-called revelations of God's will, are the guide posts to the goal we would reach, but we need to guard against the mistake of supposing that the guide post is the goal. That because it points out one road, there are not many many other roads, some of which are marked by other guide posts, while some are just faint foot paths, beaten out by adventurous and ardent souls who felt constrained to advance at any hazard, and so had to force a road for themselves. Vedanta philosophy tells those who study it that amid all the endless varieties of men, we may group them by their most prominent tendencies, under four heads. These divisions are not final, as a man might perhaps find who would come nearly equally correctly under two or more of these. We Another method taught by Vedânta as a means of climbing the steps, is called Râja Yoga, or the method of mental control. This is for another group of men, for those who care little for ethical problems, but who find the keenest pleasure in mental analysis, in searching into the hidden workings of human thought and striving to pierce behind the limits of the senses. To the majority of the men of the western world, the idea that man can control the mind instead of being controlled by it, is a comparatively new one. Yet there are many who enjoy studying mental phenomena and modern psychology is really a formulated record of the nervous processes resulting from thought action. The idea that thought and consciousness are products of material bodily processes has rather had the effect of putting things topsy turvy so to speak. The Hindu psychology exactly reversed the process and regarded the molecular changes taking place in the brain as the results of thought, rather than the producers of thought. The subject of mental investigation has always maintained a strong degree of interest for some minds and to find that Vedânta calls Râja or royal yoga, is likely to be interesting. Vedânta, however, states its ultimate purpose, which is to teach mankind how to realize the Self, so in offering Râja Yoga to a certain class of minds, it at the same time insists strongly on the fact that he who pursues this method for anything less than the highest result, is likely to do himself more harm than good. By this is meant, that with more knowledge, subtler temptations come, and while the student may gain a certain amount of knowledge, it will only serve to lend him into error if pursued for its own sake, instead of as a means to the real end of Râja Yoga, which is realization. The “steps” on this “staircase” are possibly steeper than on the one in Karma Yoga. Vedânta declares in terms as positive as those used by Jesus—“Strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth to life, and few there are which find it.” The Veda says, “The way is very difficult, it is as if it were, walking on the blade of a razor.” Yet it tells us we have the power to free ourselves and only need sufficient perseverance to accomplish the task.

Yet another of the four main varieties of mankind, those of strongly devotional nature, who want to love and worship, are provided for by the Vedânta in what is known as Bhakti Yoga. The “steps” on this “staircase” are made easy by love. One does not count effort when striving to reach an object arduously beloved. And to help man to love God without fear, He loves Him under different aspects, as friend, as master, as child, as husband. True bhakti has for its object Iswara, and it must be without fear, without bargaining, without looking for personal gain. When her first born is laid in her arms, how fondly does the mother’s heart go out to it. What return does she ask? She loves the little one no matter what its defects. Indeed the true mother but loves the more the feeble or deformed little child, who is thereby more dependent upon her. That is the way to love God, just for love’s sake, never even thinking of result. That is the kind of love that St. Paul wrote, being the only thing of value in the world. It outweighs all gifts, all action, all powers, it is “The fulfilling of the law,” it purifies, and it brings salvation. The Hindu Bhakti rises to a perfect ecstasy of devotion, where all distinction of lover and beloved is lost in realization of the one, perfect Self.

For the last of the four varieties of men, the philosophers, Gâhana Yoga, or the method of pure reason and knowledge is given by Vedânta. There are some, who must reason and argue everything out, and who are strong and brave enough to follow the process to its very end. There are many more who think they are rationalists, but when they have travelled a little way on the path of reason, want to stop and rest there, too much appalled by the terrors of the way to dare to proceed. This is the shortest, most inaccessible of all the "staircases," but at the top of the realization of the Self is to be reached. Hard indeed are the "steps" here. As Swami Vivekananda says, "it is a hard task to be a philosopher."

There are the four principal ways that Vedanta points out to enable men to reach liberation. They are closely interwoven and cannot be absolutely separated. Indeed, a man may very easily practice two or more of them at once, and some of each must enter into all. For instance, the worker must love, or he would not want to help his fellow men, and he who loves naturally shows it in his work. The goal of all the yoga is the same and all have to be persistently practiced. Meditation and concentration are needed and therefore a certain amount of mental control must accompany the practice of any of these yogas.

There is a question very often asked, how can a man do all these things when he has to consider the questions of ways and means, how to earn his living and perhaps support a family? If Vedanta were only a religion for such as could give up the world and retire to a cave or a forest, it would not at all deserve the title of a universal religion; for very few even wish to do such a thing; that it would really be unnecessary; it would not invent an elaborate system of procedure for them. But Vedanta claims its right to be considered universal, because it provides a way for every grade of humanity. We ourselves have laid upon ourselves certain duties, and will have to fulfill them, before we can throw them aside, while we seek to follow an easier path. Neither have we got to change our religion, if we have one that is more than a name to us. What Vedanta would say to us is to put life into that religion, to look to the highest ideal it holds up and be satisfied with nothing lower, to faithfully, earnestly follow this ideal and it will in the end lead us to the same goal of realization of the true Self. What Vedanta insists upon is not form, or ceremony or rite of any special kind, but it lays all the emphasis on the underlying motive prompting to these external observances. In and of themselves they are useless. Form for form's sake will never be anything but an empty shell, a mere lifeless imitation of real religion and real effort. The one thing that must be present is faith. This faith is not blind belief by any means; it is rather what St. Paul describes as "the substance of things hoped for." Such faith is a real religious conviction and is what is awakened in the human heart by one fleeting glimpse of a world beyond the horizon of the senses, or even the mind; it is an impression of the Infinite. After this has come to a man and become a genuine force in his life, he will become religious, even if he refuses to accept any existing form of religion. This spirit of true religion often breathes in the writings of great scientific men, to whom an intimate acquaintance with the wonders of Nature brings a revelation of the Infinite. Followers of orthodox religions would no doubt often call these men atheists, because of their inability to accept a traditional view of God, but Vedanta recognizes in such men, the true spirit of religion, and would encourage them to develop their spiritual nature through the methods best adapted for them. Hindu literature teems with examples of men who reached the fullest fruition through the humblest paths. A faithful performance of even tedious and disagreeable daily tasks, is in no way incompatible with great religious development.

And this has been proved in every form of religion, Christian, Buddhist, Moslem or Brahminical. The lives of great saints in all lands and in all ages, prove that they belonged to every class in life, from beggars to emperors. In every human soul is a spark of that Freedom Absolute, that power to rise above any environment and reach its source, in the realization of its oneness with the Divine. If man were entirely at the mercy of his environment, what would be but a mere machine? What chance for improvement could ever come to him? The whole history of the human race is the history of man's use of his environment to enable him to rise above it and produce a new environment. In other words, he works in and through law, to finally transcend law. Therefore, be man's conditions what they may, they cannot prevent his effort to be religious, if he has the sincere desire to be so. Let man have to labour as hard as he will, there will be moments when he can lift his thoughts to the great unknown Beyond. Those who have not evolved to the place where they are ready to do this consciously, will be pushed along unconsciously by the great law of development, until they are prepared to consciously cooperate with this law. It is better and easier to go forward consciously and therefore willingly, but progress is inevitable. When man has reached that stage to the great march of evolution where he can see the purpose of it all, he is ready to make much more rapid growth. It is not necessary for him to be able to demonstrate to everybody that what that purpose is. It is enough if he himself perceives it, for then he will shape his life in harmony with it. The vast majority of mankind to-day, regard pleasure as the purpose of life, but even that concept has greatly widened out since its first promulgation. The early Hedonists sought individual pleasure, but the more advanced of their modern successors, while still seeking pleasure, have come to comprehend that it cannot be solely of the individual; that it must be the universal pleasure. Altruism recognizing the solidarity of the human race and the impossibility of complete satisfaction for one member of it, at the expense of any of the rest. And the most advanced school of utilitarian ethics makes perfect selfishness its highest ideal.

Vedanta philosophy teaches a higher purpose than pleasure. It proclaims that the end and aim of all this long and often painful process of development is perfection, and that perfection can only consist in the realization of the Self. As Swami Vivekananda says: "Just as in your hymn it is said 'Nearer my God to thee, the same hymn would be very good to the Vedanta, only here it would change a word and make it—'Nearer my God to me.' The idea that the goal is far off, away beyond nature; attracting us all towards it, has to be brought down nearer and nearer without degrading or degrading it, until it comes closer and closer, and the God of Heaven becomes the God in Nature till the God in Nature becomes the God who is Nature, and the God who is Nature becomes the God within this temple of the body, and the God living in the temple of the body, becomes the temple itself, becomes the soul and man, and there it reaches the last words it can teach.  The ideal of freedom that you perceived was correct, but you projected it outside of yourself, and that was your mistake. Bring it nearer and nearer until you find that it was all the time within you, that it was the Self of your own self.  Then we shall be free. Then and then alone, will all difficulties vanish, then all perfections of the heart will be smoothed away; all evokedness made straight, then will vanish the delusion of manifoldness and nature; and Mary, instead of being a horrible hopeless dream as it is now, will become beautiful, and this earth instead of being a prison house as it is now, will become our play-ground and even danger and difficulties, even all sufferings will become defined as it were, and show us their real nature, that behind everything is standing our own real Self."—From the 'Brahmandin.'

The Secret of Death—A Story.

In the days of Amanthunga Pandya who ruled over the Madura kingdom with singular justice, a Brahmin was going with his wife and child from Tirumappar to Madura. Owing to the fatigue of the journey, the wife fell thirsty and the Brahmin had to leave her in the cool shade of a tree and himself proceed in search of water. Just then it so happened that an arrow which had sometime back got stuck among the leaves of the tree fell down upon the woman and ended her life. The Brahmin soon brought water, but finding his wife pierced with an arrow and dead, set up a loud wailing and vowed vengeance on the murderer. Looking round him for finding out the culprit, he saw, within a few yards of him, a hunter holding a bow in his hand and with a quiver on his back. At once he ran up to him and seizing him by the arm charged him with murder. But the hunter denied that he was the cause of murder and said that he did not throw any dart either on the tree or on the woman.

The Brahmin, of course, did not believe him, abused him right and left and wanted him to go with him at once to the Pandyan Court.

The innocent hunter readily consented and the Brahmin taking the dead wife on his back and his weeping child in his arms, set out with the hunter to Madura. On reaching the palace gate, he laid down the corpse and set up a tremendous wailing which brought the king himself out of the palace. "O king," said the Brahmin, "had you been just how could my poor wife have been killed in broad day-light by this villainous hunter, who, having doubtless committed the murder, refuses even to admit his guilt? Is this justice? Is this how you rule the country? The Pandyan kingdom so long famous—all over the world—has approached its end through your injustice. The Pandyan fame is tarnished once for ever." The king appeased the Brahmin's anger saying (kings were different in those days from what they are now). "O best of Brahmins, grieve not: I shall enquire into the case and with Sundareswaran's grace find out the truth and do the needful. My injustice is self-acted, for such a horrible deed has been done in broad day-light and so near my capital. I do not deserve to sit on the throne until I fully enquire into the case and get at the truth." Then he addressed the hunter and said, "If you have committed this act, admit it and it will be good for all of us." The hunter said, "My Lord, I am more surprised than your majesty that such an occurrence should have transpired in so justly governed a country as thy Majesty's. Your Majesty is unto us as God Sundareswaran himself, and in his presence and yours, I swear I know nothing of the cause of the Brahmin's death." Thereupon the king held a formal enquiry into the circumstances of the case, but he could not come at the truth. He then adjourned the enquiry for a subsequent day, placed the hunter in safe custody, and directed the Brahmin to bury the corpse and perform the necessary funeral ceremonies.

In the evening he went to the temple and mentally hid the whole case before the God of gods, Sundareswaran. On returning home, he declined supper and lay on the bare ground expecting a vision. His penance had the desired effect, for, towards the morning, God appeared to him in his dream and said, "Go this night with the Brahmin to the Chetty's street outside the town. There you will find a house in which marriage will be going on. Entering the house in disguise, remain there in a corner and then you will know the truth about the Brahmin's death." The king rose from his bed satisfied and in the night taking the Brahmin along with him went out disguised as a Chetty, and finding out the marriage house, they both entered into it and sat unnoticed in a corner.

Shortly after, they heard voices in the air and looking up found—for they were cued for the occasion by the grace of Sundareswaran with celestial vision—that a number of messengers of the God of death had come there and were consulting with one another as to how the life of the bridegroom may be taken away to the abode of Yama. One of them said, "He has no disease, what shall we do?" Another said, "We must try for some contrivance as we did yesterday, by making the arrow, which had long stuck up among the leaves of the tree under which the Brahmin woman was lying, fall upon her and do away with her life." Another said, "We shall likewise contrive to-day to let loose the cow in the yard make it fall upon the bridegroom and put an end to his life." "A very nice contrivance," said a fourth, "for it is very natural that the cow should get excited with the noise of the drums and other musical instruments which are now playing on the pila." "This is even more clever," said another, "than the contrivance of yesterday's by which we made away with the life of the Brahmin woman." The king looked at the Brahmin who was hearing all this and said, "How innocent is the hunter whom we have brought for trial!" The Brahmin said, "Yes even so he is. It was all the work of fate, but we shall watch how these messengers of Yama manage their present work."

Hardly had he finished, when a cow rushed into the house and furiously dashed the bridegroom to the ground and ran away. The poor bridegroom was fatally hurt by the fall and immediately became a corpse. The marriage changed into a funeral and the house was filled with mourners. The Brahmin applauded the king for his justice and the divine grace which through his Pandya he had secured, and humbly begged his pardon for his rash accusation and the trouble he had caused him. It is needless to add that the hunter was set free and liberally compensated for the trouble he undertook. The Brahmin also was given by the generous king a large sum of money for marrying again. The details of the case and the divine manner by which the truth was revealed to the king, were proclaimed throughout the kingdom and a public festival celebrated in honour of God Sundareswaran.

The above story is an illustration of the truth that behind the apparent causes with which we satisfy our inquisitiveness, there remains a mystery which it is impossible for us to unravel. We may ascribe things to Time, to Fate, or to Karma; but that does not solve the problem, but only wards off the inquiry. They are not causes, but only explanations for causes. In the question of death, as much as in that of life, there is an authoritative "Thus far shalt thou go and no further." How true the saying:

Veil after veil will lift but there must be Veil upon veil behind.

After all, however, life and death are only relatively real, and, as the Gita says, he who thinks that one slays another and he that says that one is slain by another both of them do not know the truth (11. 19). So also the Sruti 'If the slayer thinks I slay, if the slain thinks I am slain, then both of them do not know well' (Kath. Up. 1, ii. 19). The wise do not grieve either for the living or for the dead.' (Gītā, 11, 11).

Thoughts on the Bhagavad Gītā.

(Continued from page 143).

We have seen that Krishna's advice to Arjuna, instead of being opposed to the doctrine of non-resistance, which has been proclaimed as an ideal in nearly all the countries of the world, is indeed the truer interpretation of it.
It was really a bold thing for a teacher of morality, as Krishna was, to advise a man to fight even against his will, and therefore it is no wonder that critics like Bishop Wood attacked and perverted the Gītā with all the vehemence of a foreign Missionary. We have done what we can to show that Krishna is not so bad a teacher as our Christian friends in their ignorance represent him to be and that the great Gītā, deservedly called the Song Celestial, is the best key to the scriptures, even of other countries.

The difficulties we had to contend will all vanish and the explanations we had to offer become likewise unnecs-ecessary if we call back to our minds the philosophical signification of Krishna and Arjuna. Krishna, as we know represents the Paramatman eternally tutoring, counselling, and guiding the human mind which is symbolised as Arjuna. According to this allegorical or rather philosophical interpretation of the Gītā, the advice which was given to fight unmindful of the ties of brother, father, teacher and friend is perfectly legitimate and easily intelligible. Duryodhana and his host represent, as we said, the bad Vritritis, the evil propensities and thoughts of the mind, while the army of the Pandavas and their allies, all stand for those good tendencies, pure Sankalpas and noble thoughts which make for the liberation of the individual. In the battle both the good and the bad Vritits of the mind have to perish, for Moksha or the seat of final release is absolute rest. 'That is the highest state,' says the Maṭravanji Upanishad, 'where all the Vritritis of the mind have perished and where there is neither sleep nor thought.' 'Let the wise subordinate his speech by mind, subdue his mind by intellect, subdue his intellect in the great self and subdue this also in the quiet self.' (Kath.

Upa. III. 13). That the highest state is one of absolute rest where the mind is completely dead, as it were, is well described in the following Sruti. 'The wise think that the Fourth which is cognisant of neither internal nor external objects nor of both, which is not a compact mass of knowledge, is neither intelligent nor unintelligent, which is invisible, not acting; incomprehensible, undeformable, incapable of proof and indescribable and which is the sole essence of 1-am-ness with no trace of the conditioned world, all calm, all bliss, without duality.
This is the Atman; it should be known.' (Mand. Upa.
7.)

For attaining to this state, the mind must be completely subdued and all activity has to cease; for action necessarily implies imperfection. 'Where there is, as it were, duacity, there sees another another thing, there smells another another thing, there tastes another another thing, there speaks another another thing, there hears another another thing, there minds another another thing, there touches another another thing; but how does one, to whom all has become mere soul, see anything, hear smell anything, how speak anything, how hear anything, how mind anything, how touch anything, how know anything?' (Bṛ. Upa. IV, IV, 15.) Saint-ship, says the Gītā, is ceasing from all the works. The man therefore who aspires to realise the Atman, in other words, to know himself, which has been described as 'the highest end, the highest bliss, the greatest joy,' should strictly follow the Upanishadic precept above quoted—'Let the wise subdue his speech by mind, subdue his mind by intellect, subdue his intellect in great self and subdue that also in the quiet self.' This holding back of the senses and the mind is what is called Yoga. 'The state which ensues when the five organs of knowledge remain with the mind, and intellect does not strive is called the highest aim. When all the desires cease which were cherished in one's heart, then the mortal becomes immortal; then he obtains here (in this world) Brahman. When all the bonds of the heart are broken in this life, then the mortal becomes immortal;
this alone is the instruction of all the Vedas.' (Kā.
Upa. 11, VI, 10, 14, 15.) Such ambitions as that of doing good to the world, as well as those of enjoying what we have, is in their own way, are real hindrances in the way of Yoga and therefore have to be subdued with effort.
All restlessness is imperfection and shows lost balance.
Therefore however good may be the ideas and aspirations that might spring in one's mind, however helpful they may be in the earlier stages of spirit-progress, the endeavour of one who has advanced so far as to long for release from this world of Maya, should be to keep them all down and strive with singleness of aim and intensity of purpose to realise that which is the end of all Karma and whose nature is absolute, blissful and imperishable.

Having thus far dwelt upon a difficulty which will not fail to strike the intelligent reader at the very outset and vitiated Krishna from the charge of preaching a dangerous doctrine, let us resume the thread of our 'thoughts' and sketch out, as we proposed, the plan of the Gītā. Krishna, we saw, began with giving a philosophical dignity to the problem of Arjuna, and raising it from the plane of narrow practical considerations, he viewed it from the stand-point of the perfected sage. After showing how, from the philosopher's point of view, there was no sin in Arjuna's fighting, he descends to the plane of a Kāliyugī and urges his friend to fight and thereby do his caste duty. Then he propounds the philosophy of action and shows how action when performed without caring for its fruits and as a service to the Lord throws open by itself the door to that exalted state of bliss, where man is free for ever from the liability to be played upon by the world. The fact with which Arjuna is made to forget the hour and lose sight of his individual problem is simply admirable, and the question even so early as in the second chapter is no longer, whether it is just or unjust to kill the Kauravas, but what are the marks of a perfected sage; how would he speak, what wilt he do and how would he behave?
(11, 54.) The remainder of the second chapter is taken up with a description of what is known of Sankhya Yoga.
Then the question comes "if O Lord thou thinkest that wisdom is better than action, why doest thou command me to engage in a horrid deed?" The reply to this question forms the subject of the three subsequent chapters—three, four and five. How action leads to wisdom and how wisdom is sureness from all works, are elaborated in these three chapters with wonderful fullness, so much so, that though the germs of Karma Yoga are found in the Upanish-shades, the credit may well be said to belong to the Gītā more than to anything else, of having thrown open an almost new path to salvation, which, though by itself not all-sufficient, yet goes a great way towards the end. The mutual relation between the two Yogas, Karma and Guana is explained in VI, 3, which says that for him who desires Guana Yoga, Karma Yoga is necessary and for him who has attained the former control of mind is the chief requisite. (To be continued).

Key to Vedic Worship.

The sages known as Valakhilyas addressing Prajapati said, "O Lord, pray clear our doubt with regard to one point. Of Fire, Air, Sun, Prana, Food, Brahman and Vishnu, some worship one and others another; but who of these is the highest? He who in thy opinion is the highest, we shall also regard as the highest." "Fire and others," replied Prajapati, "are the chief forms of the great indestructible and boundless Brahman; of these every man in this world worships that which he likes best. All these gods are Brahman. They form the chief bodies of Brahman. They should be meditated upon as Brahman. They should be worshipped as Brahman. They should be regarded not as gods but as the highest Brahman. He who worships them in this way becomes one with them and attains higher and higher regions. In the end when the world ceases to exist for him (by the intensity of his devotion), he becomes one with the Atman."

"The following," Prajapati continued, "is the prayer which Katsayana made,—Thou art Brahman; Thou art Vishnu; Thou art Rudra; Thou art Prajapati; Thou art Agni; Thou art Varuna; Thou art Vayu; Thou art Indra; Thou art the Moon; Thou art Food; Thou art Yama; Thou art the Earth; Thou art the whole Universe; Thou art Indestructible. This world depends on Thee for (securing) the ends of life and for its nature. Prostration to Thee who art the Lord of all, Thou appeared as the universe. Thou art He who made this world. Thou art best this world (in the end). Thou art the life of this universe. Thou art the Lord of all enjoyments internal and external. Thou art the placid Atman. Prostration to Thee. Prostration to Thee, who art the greatest secret. Prostration to Thee that art unthinkable, boundless, and without either beginning or end."

—(From the Maitrayani Upanishad).

Elements of the Vedanta.

CHAPTER VI.

The Self in Us.

We proposed in the last chapter to proceed to discuss the nature of Brahman; but, on second thought, it appears desirable to add a few more words to what has already been said with regard to the changelessness of the Atman. Those who have followed our treatment of the subject with patience would remember our analysis of the mind or the inner man. Every act of the mind, we said, involves five different functions—those of Manas, Intellect, Will, Ahankara and Sakshi; or witnesses. The last of these, we observed, should be changeless, hence the necessary background of the constantly varying states of mind.

The question has been asked, both in our country and elsewhere, if this witness should necessarily be changeless. A particular school of Buddhist philosophers, known by the name of Kahanika Vijnana Vidiira, assert for instance that the 'I' in us is not a changeless entity, but simply a series of cognitions or ideas referring to the ego, called in their philosophy Alya-Vignana. There is another series, they say, consisting of ideas referring to external objects such as colour and the like, and this series is called by them Pravritti-Vignana. Both the series are said to exist side by side with each other and the first is said to be the cause of the second. According to this school then, not merely are our ideas changing but also the knower, the 'I.'

This position has been ably refuted by that eminent champion of Vedic Monism, the great Sankaracharaya in his Sutra Bhashya. In commenting upon Vedanta Sutra II, 2, 25, Sankara says, "And on account of remembrance the philosopher who maintains that all things are momentary only would have to extend that doctrine to the perceiving person (Upalabhidhava); that is however not possible on account of the remembrance which is consequent on the original perception. That remembrance can take place only if it belongs to the same person who previously made the observation. For we observe what one man has experienced is not remembered by another man. How indeed could there arise the conscious state expressed in the sentences, 'I saw that thing and now I see this thing,' if the seeing person were not in both cases the same? That the consciousness of recognition takes place only in the case of the observing and the remembering subject being one and the same, is a matter known to every one; for if there were in the two cases different subjects, the state of consciousness arising in the mind of the remembering person would be, I remember another person made the observation' but no such state of consciousness does arise. When, on the other hand, such a state of consciousness does arise, then every body knows that the person who made the original observation and the person who remembers are different persons and then the state of consciousness is expressed as follows: 'I remember, that that other person saw that and that.' In the case under discussion however, the Sinaisaka himself—whose state of consciousness is 'I saw that and that'—knows that there is one thinking subject only to which the original perception as well as the remembrance belongs, and does not think of denying that the past perception belonged to himself, for any more than he denies that fire is hot and gives light.... We admit that sometimes with regard to an external thing a doubt may arise whether it is that or is merely similar to that. For mistake may be made concerning what lies outside our minds, but the conscious subject never has any doubt whether it is itself or only similar to itself, as is rather distinctly conceived that it is one and the same subject, which yesterday had a certain sensation and to-day remembers that sensation.

Referring to the question of impermanent self. Vyasa says in Sutra I, 2, 31, "And on account of the momentariness of the Aalya Vignana, it cannot be the abode of mental impressions." In his comment on this Sutra, Sankara observes, "Unless there exists one continuous principle equally connected with the past, the present and the future, in other words, an absolutely unchangeable self which cognizes everything, we are unable to account for remembrance, recognition and so on, which are subject to mental impressions dependent on place, time and cause." Another argument for proving the existence of a changeless, witnessing self is that ideas are not self-illuminating and require something else to apprehend them.

"By maintaining the idea to be illuminated by itself, you make yourself," says Sankara, "guilty of an absurdity no less than if you said that fire burns itself." He adds, "If you maintain that the idea, lamp-like, manifests itself without standing in need of a further principle to illuminate it, you maintain thereby that ideas exist which are not apprehended by any of the means of knowledge and which are without knowing the Selves, which is no better than to assert that a thousand lamps burning inside some impenetrable mass of rocks manifest themselves. And if you should maintain that we admit your doctrine, since it follows from what we have said that the idea itself implies consciousness, we reply that, as observation shows, the lamp in order to become manifest requires some other intellectual agent furnished with instruments, such as the eye, and that therefore the idea also as equally being a thing to be illuminated becomes manifest only through an ulterior intelligent principle. And if you finally object that we, when advancing the witnessing self as self-proved, merely express in other words the Buddha tenet that the idea is self-manifested, we refuse you by remarking that your ideas have the attributes of originating, passing away, being manifold and so on, while our self is one and permanent."

We have thus seen that the real 'I' in us is a changeless factor. The existence of such a changeless entity is inerrible from our fleeting mental states and cognitions, though its best proof is the realization of the Maha Vakyas (a great saying) 'I am Brahman.' This much however we can understand with the help of our feeble reason, that that entity being changeless is infinite and eternal; also, for the fact of its transcending space and time is involved in the very idea of changelessness. Change is possible only in space and time and everything in space and time undergoes, as we see, constant change. The Atman being changeless is therefore infinite and eternal, and from this, it necessarily follows, as we have already seen, that Manas, Intellect, Will and Ahankara are all of them mere illusory modifications of that Atman and that all that exists, all these innumerable worlds, this sun and moon and stars are only apparently different from the infinite Atman whose nature is Pragnana. Where one sees nothing else, hears nothing else, understands nothing else, that is the Infinite," says the Chandogya Upanishad (VIII, xxiv, 1). 'Wherever see variety in Him proceeds from He leads to death' (Bri. Upa. IV, 1, 14). The Atman is Adinatam; i.e., without (the three) distinctions, says the Mandukya Upanishad, 'He is without parts, without action, tranquil," says Svetaastavata.

That the Atman is attributeless and undefinable is well expressed in the following Santi, 'This Self is not this, nor that, nor both. It is unseeable, for it cannot be set on. It is not scattered, for it cannot be scattered. It is within you, for it comes not into contact. But without color, it is not subject to pain or destruction (IV, v, 15). 'Where does that Inny abide, my Lord?' asked Narada of Sanatkumara. The sage replied. 'It abideth in its own glory or (if you enquire where is that glory, I say it doth not abide in its glory.' (Ch. Upa. VII, xxiv, 1).

The realization of the unity expressed in such statements as 'Verily the Self is all this' is the ultimate purpose for which the Upanishads were revealed to mankind. 'He who is aware of this (i.e., the Self extending from above, below and everywhere), says Sanatkumara, 'seeing the Self thus, thinking it thus, and knowing it thus, becomes one whose entire devotion is to the Self, whose recreation is in the Self, whose felicity is the Self, he becomes self-rependent. He is able to accomplish whatever he desires in all the regions of the universe. Those who believe otherwise having others for their masters go to perishable regions. For them nothing is accomplished in any of the regions of the universe.'

'Such is the glory of the Atman who is to be heard and thought upon and known.'

An old man and Sri-Krishna.

There was once a certain old Brahmin who professed to be a great Bhaktas, whatever he did, he said, 'Krishna, Krishna, this is thy doing.' One day some fire had been spread at his door for getting dried in the sun, when a cow came and ate it. The Brahmin at once took a stick in his hand and severely beat the poor cow, which consequently fell down and expired. At once, the Brahmin began to exclaim, 'Hari-Hari-Krishna-Krishna. This is thy doing.' Just then Bhrakuni happened to be with Krishna and she addressing her Lord said, 'O my Lord what a sin has now fallen to your account.' Krishna replied, 'Fear not, my dear, the sin of having killed the cow is the Brahmin's and not mine. You will shortly see how it is so.'

A few days after, the old man was giving a feast to Brahmins when Krishna, assuming the guise of a dirty old Brahmin, entered his house, sat on the ground here and there and committed diverse kinds of nuisance. The host thereupon began to rebuke him saying, 'Is this the reward for my charity? Why do you come and disturb the feast which I am holding?' The disguised Krishna replied, 'Who are you to rebuke me? Are you the real host?' The Brahmin got exceedingly angry and said, 'Did I not tell you that I was the host? I will show you who I am,' and so saying, he began to shoo him out. At once Krishna showed his real form and said, the merit of this feast is yours, while the sin of killing the cow is mine I suppose. A very fair division to be sure. 'Let both be yours', and so saying he disappeared.

Like the Brahmin in this story, how often are we prone to take the merit of our successes and good deeds to ourselves, while ascribing our failures and evil deeds to the Lord.

Review.

The Dawn, No. 3. (Calcutta):—We are again in a position to express our warm appreciation of the spirit and scope of this new Religious and Philosophical Magazine. The article on Vedanta Sutras exposes an important error in Dr. Thibaut's exposition, and proves that "the important discrepancy" discovered by him between the views of the great ancient teachers Advandlami and Sainini in regard to Brahman does not exist at all. The writer points out how the Sankara reconciles the seeming contradiction. "The Situation in India" gives a clear analysis of the conflict of ideas and civilizations in India and the conditions under which alone Indian civilization can hold its own against the invasion of Western Social and Ethical standards. The article on "Appearance and Reality" is a statement of the doctrine of the Sankarins and the Realisation of the Absolute. The introduction to Sri Sankara's Tattvarudbha promises well, and the first installment of the translation of Svayamprajnati is instructive. It was a splendid idea of the editors to include in the Magazine passages descriptive of Hinduism. Sri Krishna and his Lila are gathered in the hearts of all Hindus in a way altogether without parallel in human history, and these bewitching Sanskrit verses are calculated to touch the most tender chords in the Bhakta's heart. We hope the succeeding numbers will maintain the present standard of excellence.